

(2) The lecturer's expenses shall be paid.

(3) The proceeds of the lectures over and above the expenses shall be absolutely at the disposal of the organization under whose auspices the lectures may be given, as the lecture scheme is not intended to make money for the University or for Convocation.

(4) Where the lectures are given under parochial auspices, or under those of any Branch of Convocation, it shall be understood that the lecturer is to be allowed, at the close of the lecture, to set forth the objects of Trinity University and to make an appeal on behalf of Convocation.

College Chronicle.

The authorities, in announcing the prize subjects for 1897 early this term, have performed a good act which should become a precedent in future, as the advantages of such a change are so obvious that they need not be pointed out. The Prize Subjects for 1897 are:—

Sermon—St. Matthew xxi., 42; or Hebrews iv., 14.

Latin Prose—Sunt aliquid manes.

Latin Verse—Pandora.

Greek Iambics—Shakespeare: Richard III., Act I., Scene 4. in the sea.

English Essay—The True Function of a University.

English Verse—Armenia.

On Hallowe'en a strong contingent from the College took its place in the first gallery of the Grand which was already well filled by a strong force of embryo sawbones from the Medical College, and a large number of enthusiasts from the College of Pharmacy. The pillars in the pit and gallery were almost all resplendent in their red and black covering, which evidenced the enterprise and energy of the undergraduates of Trinity when they take their proper place in the proceedings on "students' night." 'Varsity ruled
