TRUE GREATNESS.

Wealth, honor, pleasures worldly are but baits
 Drifting upon the tide of time, by which minds
 Light, frivolous, and vain are caught, as fish
 Inexperienced and full of silly thoughts, catch
 At the painted fly, and find in it their death.
 Wouldst thou, my dearest friend, entwine thy brow around
 With an immortal wreath, and flowers that never fade?
 Dost thou aspire to dwell in amaranthine bowers,
 And halls more durable than marble? Is thy
 Desire on high to build thy nest beneath the shade
 Of Everlasting Love? To rest under the Almighty's wings?
 Know that thoughts lofty, deeds noble must inspire;
 Climb high! No risk, no gain. Souls low and grovelling
 Never yet accomplished deeds that nations fired,
 Or threw around their brows the light of immortality serene.
 Traverse the lands of thought; explore mind in its
 Hidden depths; from learning's treasures cull; let science,
 Art, and observation keen add to thy well-selected
 Stores; but, above all, enter the fanes of piety; bow
 Low before thy God, and seek that grace which
 He alone, through Christ, bestows on sinful man.
 Piety deep, and genuine holiness, will but add
 Lustre to thy brow, and to thy character dignity and grace.
 On mercy's errands fly! Chase, by thy presence, sorrow's clouds
 And guilt's dark looks away. Be blest in blessing!
 Imitate the life of Christ, and in his glorious footsteps tread!
