THE MAYOR TO THE PROPRIETOR OF THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

"AS GUARDIAN OF THE PUBLIC MORALS, I CAN'T PERMIT THIS SORT OF THING IN FUTURE, MR. MANNING."

"I AM informed," says Mayor Manning, in his municipal message, "that in some municipalities the authorities manage to get rid of the habitués of their jails by having them sentenced to imprisonment in the Central Prison for a term. If such a course were adopted here there would be fewer inmates in the city jail during the winter." True, Mr. Mayor, and blessings on you for the felicitous idea! But did it not occur to you at the same time that if there were fewer committed to the Central there would be all the more sent to jail? This is a thought that of course would never have been inspired but for your argument that if more were sent to the Central there would be all the less in the jail. I do not want to harass your Worship with astruse problems in social science at the very outset of your Worship's promising career—that is, always provided your Worship's promising career did not terminate on your Worship's election to office. But perhaps your Worship will permit me to further suggest in connection with this grave question that if all commitments were to the Central there would be none to the jail; and vice versa, if all commitments were to the jail— But I perceive I am bothering you and will drop the subject for the present.

HIS SAD MISS.

Bartley Campbell, who began life as a newspaper reporter, has made within five years $250,000 out of his plays.

What a solemn lesson to aspiring young journalists to resist the insidious fascination of play-writing! Poor Bartley! The really successful newspaper men of this country ought to share with him, even if they strain the banks in so doing.
