Kelly Evans made a splendid impression on the big audience gathered in Association Hall to hear his account of the Forest, Fish and Game Protective movement under the association of that name in Ontario. The interesting and beautiful big game pictures taken in the Rocky Mountains were also shown by permission of Dr. Hornaday. George T. Blackstock, K.C., presided.

Mr. Evans, who had just returned from lecturing in New Brunswick, was warmly received. His figures concerning the spoliation of the great lake fisheries caused a sensation. The white fish were practically exterminated in Ontario in 1877. From white fish were practically exterminated in Ontario in 1877. From five thousand to ten thousand were caught at a haul, and in the fall in the spawning season as many as 90,000 were taken at one haul. In Lake Erie 500,000 fish were taken in spawn. The result was the depletion of the fisheries. The commission of 1893 recommended the adoption of a proper and reasonable season; the use of nets which would not catch immature fish and the prohibition of gill nets. None of their recommendations were followed.

If the total number of fish caught if the total number of fish caught in the total number of the fish to the fish to the fish to the total number of the fish to the fall and school.

another enemy of the lish of the province. One of their tugs with two men and three helpers displaced 15 sailing vessels and 45 men who had supplied the trained pilots whose loss would some day be felt.

The attraction of fish and game to tourists and their value to a country in this day was Mr. Evans' next topic. Maine, one-tenth the size of Ontario, was visited by 250,000 people a year, who spent at least $20,000,000. Maine had eight fish hatcheries; Ontario none. Maine had 2000 registered guides who got $300 a year, which was more than Ontario's net fishermen got for running the fisheries.

With regard to big game and moose and deer he said the two-legged wolf of the northern districts did the most damage. This was the poor settler,
