Aside from hearing the president's message, congress made definite progress on at least one of the problems it faces during the brief session. The house received a rule under which an effort will be made Thursday, to take up the immigration bill for prompt action.

It would limit general debate to four hours. The two-day interval was allowed to permit Representative Siegel.

The two officers stepped into the store and inquired what business called the three in there. They were told that the men had purchased revolver cartridges. Greenley and McArthur returned to the street and quickly caught up to the three. Questioned, the men stated that they were going to do some target practice in the country. Dissatisfied with their replies, the detectives took them along to Court street police station, where they were identified last night by Oliver, who immediately recognized them as his assailants.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Both houses of congress were is brief session today to hear President Wilson's annual message. It was read by the clerk, Mr. Wilson having heeded the advice of his physician not to appear in person to present his recommendations. Galleries in both senate and house were crowded. Both those drawn by the chance that the president might appear in person or the possibility that his message might touch upon the League of Nations question or his own approaching retirement to private lite were disappointed.

Mr. Wilson confined himself almost wholly to domestic questions. Only by inference did his message refer to the nearing close of his administration and that was in the concluding paragraph. The proposals he presented, the president wrote, were not so much a series of recommendations as a confession "of the faith in which I was bred and which it is my solemn purpose to stand by until my last fighting day."
