

GOOD THINGS COMING TO THEATRES OF
ST. JOHN

IMPERIAL NEXT WEEK.

Next week at the Imperial William H. Lytell & Co. will present a ludicrous farce-comedy entitled "An All-Night Session," being the extraordinary predicament of a young husband—a bridegroom upon reaching home from his club in the small hours of the morning and the able argument offered in his behalf by his father-in-law. Mr. Lytell, who will be so kindly remembered by the St. John people as a star with big productions in this city years ago and especially for his stupendous presentation of the spectacular play, "Youth," in the exhibition buildings, will doubtless receive hearty welcome. He is assisted in his sketch by charming Miss Hilda Dene and R. Mansfield. The Imperial will be open for Monday will be "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," scenery and Pathe's British Gazette.

THE GEM TONIGHT.

"The Galley Slave," with Theda Bara and Lonsome Lake in a dashing comedy makes a great Saturday night seven reel programme at the Gem. Come in out of the rain and enjoy it.

MONTMAGNO UNDER

CROSS-EXAMINATION

Amends Some Parts of Evidence in Sensational New York Gunman Case

New York, Oct. 21.—The illness of a juror halted Martin W. Littleton's cross-examination of Gaetano Montmagno, slayer of Michael Gaimari in the trial of Michael A. Rofrano, alleged promoter of the crime. The interruption came after Montmagno had been compelled to amend in several important particulars the story he had told under direct examination.

The cross-examination of Montmagno took him back over his testimony. He had told the jury that Rofrano, posing as a sort of king who could override the mayor, the governor and other powers of the city and state, had compelled him, under threat of death, to kill Michael Gaimari. He insisted that his ignorance of the language and the customs of the country had combined to make him Rofrano's dupe, but Mr. Littleton caused him to admit that he had stabbed the victim in the back of the head, and he gave evidence of discomfort as Mr. Littleton continued to ask him question after question about this lapse of memory.

Montmagno contradicted important testimony of other witnesses. Two of these gunmen, Joseph La Salle and James Serafino, had testified that they had understood that Montmagno had made two attempts on Gaimari's life and that he had been shot in the chest. Mr. Littleton asked him to tell him that he had been shot in the chest, and he testified that he had been shot in the chest.

Serafino had added that he saw Montmagno running half-dressed from the scene of the stabbing in Moore street, and La Salle had testified that he had been present at the home of Rocco Carvale, one of the leaders of the guinea, when Montmagno, then a guest there, admitted that he had stabbed Gaimari and had expressed regret that the wound had not proven fatal.

The next time, Mr. Littleton asked the whole gun into him. La Salle said that Montmagno had said:

This testimony, although contributed by gunmen who were assisting in the prosecution of Rofrano, did not agree with the slayer's contention that he had never known Gaimari and that he was pointed out by John Brundini a few weeks before the murder, and that Montmagno had said:

As Mr. Littleton continued to press Montmagno with questions, he seemed convinced that the lawyer was trying to lead him into a trap. He studied each question carefully, and refused to commit himself on dates or numbers. Although forced to contradict himself when questioned about his movements before he killed Gaimari, he could not be shaken from his declaration that Rofrano had ordered him to commit the crime, and that he and the "boss" had had frequent conferences over the proposed murder.

Mr. Littleton attempted to show that Montmagno had killed a man in Brooklyn before stabbing two others and shooting Gaimari, but this the witness denied. He admitted that he had led to Rofrano when he told him that he would bring "men from Brooklyn" to Rofrano's club house during the mayor's election in 1914, and also that he had had no scruples about stealing before turning his hand to murder.

Montmagno's cross-examination will continue for another day, if not longer. He will be followed on the stand by Louis Mira, another gunman.

RECENT DEATHS.

THE BEST QUALITY AT A REASONABLE PRICE

Pride Of Possession

That is a distinctive attribute of the Howard watch. Every man who possesses a Howard feels particularly proud of his watch—and justly so, for the Howard could not have maintained its reputation as a superior timepiece through these many years unless it had the watch quality to back it up.

Nor would it be generally regarded as "the best watch" today if its reputation had not been based on its accuracy and durability facts.

The Howard is supreme as a presentation watch—the gift of honor bestowed by lodge, employees, co-workers or friends.

Step into Sharpe's and examine Howard watches. Prices range from $40 to $150.

STRIKING BITS FROM THE SPEECHES AT TEACHERS' CONVENTION IN MONCTON

Moncton, Oct. 21.—The closing session of the Westmorland, Kent and Albert Teachers' Institute was held yesterday afternoon. Dr. W. S. Carter, R. P. Stevens of Sussex, director of elementary agricultural education; Fletcher Peacock of Fredericton, director of manual training, and Miss Eleanor Robinson, editor of the Educational Review, took part in the discussion.

There were many complimentary references to the new Aberdeen school in which the sessions were held.

Dr. Carter urged the co-operation of parents and teachers, and told of what is being accomplished along this line in the connection with the "National Mission," which is a plan for a national religious revival. Services are being held throughout the kingdom.

"The resources of our country should be magnified through our schools and a broad outlook developed," said Mr. Stevens, who is a member of the National Mission, in connection with consolidation and technical education is needed in this province," said Mr. Peacock, who is a member of the National Mission, in connection with consolidation and technical education is needed in this province.

"I believe that much good can be accomplished through elementary agricultural education," said Dr. O. B. Price, M.P., who spoke at a public meeting on Thursday evening.
