AN AWFUL CONFESSION

MAXWELL ENDEAVORS TO EXPLAIN THE ST. LOUIS TRUNK MYSTERY. Sr. Louis, May 26.-In the Maxwell murder trial, to-day, the defendent was placed on the stand in his own behalf. He said his real name was Hugh M. Brooks; that he was born in Chester, England, and that he was 25 years old. He was a lawyer by profession and had studied medicine, but was not licensed to practice it. He first met Prellar in a hotel at Liverpool and after on the steamer Cephalonia bound fer Boston. They be. came fast friends, and after their arrival in Boston they agreed to meet in St. Louis and go to Auckland together. Both went to St. Louis at separate times and met as agreed. Preliar was suffering from a stricture and he treated him for it. Prellar agreed that the operation should be performed and Brooks administer ed chlor oform to Prellar. Soon he discovered that the patient was breathing heavily and that he was dying. Brooks did all in his power to revive his friend, but his in his power to revive his friend, but his efforts were without avail. Even after Prellar was dead Brooks kept up his efforts to revive him. When all hope was gone Brooks was ozerome with horror at his situation. He was a stranger in a stranger in a stranger in the stranger in a stranger in the stranger in the stranger in a stranger in the stranger in the stranger in a stranger situation. He was a stranger in a strange land and was unacquainted with the laws of the country. In a fit of desparation of the country. In a fit of desparation he placed Prellar's body in a trunk and BULL FOR SALE then wandered through the streets in a then wandered through the streets in a dazed condition. Returning to the hotel Brooks thought only of a way to escape. He searched Prellar's clothing and found a quantity of money, which he took and with which he bought a ticket to San Francisco and made various reckless purchases. He shaved off Prellar's moustache and only a prece of paper in the trunk.

The Ayrshire Full 'Sir Roger' is offered for sale at Station Stock Farm, Chatham. Sir Roger is registered No. 181, N. B. This was done to mystify the authorities and cause delay that would enable him to escape. The rest of the testimony was taken up with a recital of the details of escape, the journey to New Zealand and subsequent capture and re-turn to this city. The court room was when he administered the drug. A despatch of 27th says, -The prosecution caused the remains Preller to be re-exhumed and had parts removed, with a view to investigating the story told by Maxwell regarding the surgical operation. No such condition existed as Maxwell claimed to have been treating when he gave Preller the chloroform. The day's developments in the case were chiefly remarkable from their revelations of the prisoner's capacity for telling lies. An hour before the opening every seat in the court room was filled, Upon taking his seat Judge Van Wagoner instructed the deputies to clear the bar reserving the seats inside the railing for the members of the profession and the re-

that he desired to injure him in any way

MAXWELL AGAIN CALLED. After order was called Mr. Fauntlerov told the prisoner to take the stand and proceed with the direct examination where he left off last night. The chief where he left off last night. The chief points brought out were that his real name was Hugh M. Brooks, his home Hyde, a suburb of Manchester, England, that the man Samuel N. Brooks who came here to see him was his father, and that McCullough, the detective who spent forty-aeven days in jail with him, spoke falsely when le told of the confession made to him and the plan for procuring several other parcels of land situate on the Spring and Summer Sullings etc.—Wait for him.

Then the cross-examination began and lasted all day. It was, as are all cross-examinations, very tedious at times, and the same subjects were gone over again and again, but at times the situations were very dramatic and the questions full of interest and importance. The State through a long series of questions, brought out the fact that the prisoner had never been a physician, that he had never been in St. Bartholomew Hospital; that he had never taken any degree, and on each of these points made him acknowledge that he had lied to Preller and to others. He could give no reason for all these false statements, simply saying he did not know why he told them, but he certainly didn't intend to deceive anybody. UNDER CROSS-EXAMINATION didn't intend to deceive anybody.

The medical books were brought in and questions asked as to their ownership. He said he had owned them five years. He said he had made all the years. He said he had made all the marginal notes while pursuing his studies. "You say you wrote these marginal notes twelve months before coming to this country, in England?"

"I didn't say where," he said quickly. "Didn't you say twelve months before coming to this country?,"

"I said it might be that long."

"This note has these words;—"The best and simplest method is to pour a gramme on a napkin and hold it about four inches from the face,' signed 'W. H. L. M,' You say you wrote that twelve months before coming to this country?"

The witness here started and changed color. "That must have been written in color. "That must have, been written in this country."
"Didn't you say you wrote it in Eugland?" Mr. Clover here stood up and shook his finger at the prisoner.
"I must have written that here."
"Then you were mistaken. Didn't you have the book in your hand, with it open at this nace?"

at this page?"
The witness looked at it and murmured, "Yes,"

Mr. Clover worried the witness on this point. He brought out prominently that the witness had looked at the marginal notes and had repeatedly said that he had written them in England, and that one must have been written in this country, as it was signed "W. H. L. M." The death of Preller was taken up axd the witness' story was literally torn to pieces. He got badly mixed and entangled as to what he did. One serious entanglement witness got into was as to two letters written by him after he had trunked his victim. One of these was to Mr. Warren and said—"We are going to Texas to try ranch life a while." He was questioned as to why he wrote we, and why he wrote of going to Texas when he had already arranged for his own hight to New Zealand. Then another letter to Mr. Powers, of Boston, was produced and he was asked why he said in the was going to travel in the West with Preller. Did he intend taking his dead friend along as baggage? The witness floundered about most pitifully, and after admitting writing the letters after Preller's death sought refuge behind the fact that he was drunk.

Then his bogus diplomas were produced and the substance of many answers to a Mr. Clover worried the witness on this Then his bogus diplomas were produced and the substance of many answers to a

Then his bogus diplomas were produced and the substance of many answers to a multitude of questions was that he wrote it himself just to keep in practice as a penman.

THE MURDER SCENE.

The cross-examination then went over the whole ground of the direct—as to the terrible scene in the prisoner's room when Preller was chloroformed to death and his body packed in the trunk, Maxwell's subsequent movements, the ransacking of his victim's baggage, of his rr-ppening the fearful trunk and putting in the placard "So perish all traitors to the great cause." All this was brought out by questions the answers to which were wrung from the poor wietch as though some vital organ of painful part of his anatomy had been teuched.

The last question asked was, "Can you state, Mr. Brooks, why it is that you have lost all the evidence that would prove your innocence and have only the evidence that proves your guilt?

"I am not aware that I have."

This answer was nearly whispered. Mr. Clover leaned back in his chair and at once left the witness Brooks breathed a deep sigh of relief and at once left the witness stand and took his accustomed seat by his attorneys, and sone after the court adjourned,
