Helen Ryan was charged with drunkenness in Princess street, and also with being a common vagrant. She confessed being drunk, but wanted to be let off on account of its being so near the "Happy New Year." The Magistrate took a different view and sent her to gad for the first two months of the glad new year.

Florence McCarthy was in the station New Year's Day, but was let go. He appeared again this morning, and denied being drunk in Sydney street and carted to the station. It was proved that he was mistaken and a fine of $6, or two months in the penitentiary, was imposed.

It was proved that he was mistaken, and a fine of $6, or two months in the penitentiary, was imposed. Thomas Leary got uproariously drunk, and was arrested in Mill street while cursing and swearing at a lively rate. Previous to being arrested he called at John Hamilton's house in North street. Mrs. Hamilton asked him to take a chair. He took the chair and struck her over the head with it, and called her some very bad names. Mr. Hamilton interfered and Leary resented such interference by picking up an axe and striking him over the head. Quite a large wound was inflicted, and Mrs. Hamilton, while in court, devoted her attention to it and kept the hair back so it would be visible. A fine of $6 was imposed on Leary for his confessed drunkenness, and information was laid by Hamilton for the assabit. Charles Moore, for simple drunkenness in Water street, was fined $4.

George Woods, an able bodied man, went to the station for protection. He was warned to get work, and find a home, or one would be found for him where there would be very little intercourse with his fellow workmen.

A young man named Munroe was an rested on Friday in Portland, charged with committing an eutrage on a young girl who lives with Mr. Van Buren, the toll collector at the Suspension Bridge. The affair caused great excitement in Portland, and is being investigated at the Police Court. The court-room was crowded, and the s'reet in front of the building was occupied with a crowd. From the evidence of the complainant, Jane Mc-Carthy, a young woman 26 years of age, it appears that the assault was committed on New Year's night. She was returning from the city, and, about 10 o'clock, Munroe overtook and accosted her, but she refused to say anything to him and: endeavored to escape. He then attempted to throw her down and she resisted and screamed. No one came to her assistance He threw her down after a long struggle, choked her and threatened her, but she foiled his base designs and escaped. The voman swore positively that it was the

Written for the New Dominie BY THE TIDE. Repining at the things of life,
The things which hope defeat,
I wandered in uncertain mood
With careless, restless feet,
Until when I unheeding came
Where rolled the waters wide, stood upon the shore, and watched
The coming of the tide. Why should I watch? To me it brought No gift, or gain, or good,
Nor e'en a wave in gladness sought
To reach me where I stood.
Yet still I watched, with idle eye,
The tide, till at its height;
It paused, then slowly back again
Receded from the sight. And thus with all of us in life; We watch the coming tide,
Then while we wonder at its waves,
Its waters from us glide. But ah, unlike the ocean tide, Our fates are on it tossed, And if we scorn the gifts it brings, They pass—forever lost. So has it been, so will it be;
Some linger till too late,
Then idly from the obbing tide
The gifts of fortune wait.
They murmur that their follows own
The things to them denied;
And still they stand and idly watch
The obbing of the tide.

"HOME TO-NIGHT." BY FRANCES HAVERGAL. The lessons are done, and the prizes won,
And the counted weeks are past;
O the holiday joys of the girls and boys
Who are "home to-night" at last!
O the ringing beat of the springing feet,
As into the hall they rush!
O the tender bliss of the first home kiss,
With its moment of fervent hush.
So much to tell and to hear as well
As they gather around the glow! As they gather around the glow!
Who would not part, for the joy of heart
That only the parted can know—
At home to-night!

But all have not met, there are travellers yet Speeding along through the dark, By tunnel and bridge, past river and ridge, To the distant yet nearing mark. But hearts are warm, for the winter storm Has never a chill for love; And faces are bright with the flickering light
Of the small dim lamp above. Of the whirl and the rush and the roar, For rapid and strong, it bears them along To a home and an open door— Yes, home to-night?

O home to-night, yes, home to-night, Through the pearly gate and the open d Some happy feet on the golden street Are entering now to "go out no more."
For the work is done and the rest begun, And the training time is for ever past,
And the home of rest in the mansions blest
Is safely, joyously reached at last.
O the love and light in that home to-night!
O the songs of bliss and the harps of gold! O the glory shed on the new crowned head!

of the love and light in that home to hight!

Of the songs of bliss and the harps of gold!
Of the glory shed on the new crowned head!
Of the telling of love that can me'er be told—Of the welcome that waits at the shining gates
For those who are following far, yet near;
When all shall meet at His glorious feet
In the light and the love of his home so dear!
Yes, "home to night!"

Gown and Surplice.

To the Editor of the Tribune.

I intimated sometime ago I would offer, for the consideration of all who take any interest in the subject, some remarks concerning the use of the Surplice in the Pulpits of Episcopalian Churches. To-day, if you consent, I propose to commence the fulfilment of that intention. What I sha is ay to-day, however, will be principally by way of preface. I shall, as I proceed, present a few historical references to the feuds and martyrdoms of the early church arising out of priestly garbs, including the Surplice, in the three years next succeding the Reformation; trace the final control of the Surplice as the consideration that the doctrine or thing symbolized by them having been removed from the consideration that the doctrine or thing symbolized by them having been removed from the consideration the consideration of the Surplice as the consideration that the doctrine or thing symbolized by them having been removed from the constant them that the doctrine or thing symbolized by them having been removed from the constant them that the constant them the chorch and calmed them the constant them the

A number of witnesses were examined with nearing evidence for the defence. A number of witnesses were examined to prove an alibi. Several witnesses have testified to seeing Munroe in the city when the assault, according to the girl's statement, must have been committed. Mr. Pugsley wished the case adjourned in order that he might bring rebutting testimony, and Mr. Morrison opposed the motion.

"Preaching" are never distinctive and distinguishing titles.

It may avoid confusion also if I notice here that it has been asserted by some that it was decided in a celebrated case (Hebbert rs. Purchas) that the surplice is the proper distinctive garb to be worn in the pulpit. This is a misconstruction of the case, and a misuse of the word "ministration" for preaching. And this word carries a distinctive meaning throughout the whole judgment. In 1662 the present Rubric in the Prayer Book was enacted, and it provides that such ornaments, &c., shall be "retained" as least, ahead of all others who annually flood the editor's sanctum with communications upon this subject.

This clearly refers to the first Book, as the judgment distinctly shows, and this book authorized or prescribed the use of the Cope, Tunicle, &c., as the garb appropriate to the Communion Service. The Rev. Mr. Purchas claimed these vestments were restored by this later rubric, although were restored by this later rubric, although ise, and, taking ad
