Lighthouse good

by Peter Hart

Around nine o'clock Friday night I sauntered into the McInnes Room to find a seat before the crowds arrived. As I sat around drinking and talking to my friends, waiting for the band to begin, I noticed many apprehensive faces belonging to those who were still uncertain as to whether the band was going be good enough to justify their missing a nights studying for the exams. The group consisted of a section really made the show be as good as it was. The sax player and the trumpeter were both old members of Lighthouse.

The band did a very good job, they played every song well. They were playing a more jazzy-rock than other groups do but it was very effective, especially with the great job that the Brass did. About the only complaint I could make would be that there wasn't enough dance music in their first set but that was fixed and for the rest of the evening you had to fight to get to the dance floor. If this group comes back again I recommend you
