his southern mission in 1906, "I visited the ports of Para, Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Montevideo, Buenos Ayers, Bahia Blanca, Punta Arenas, Loto, Valparaiso, Corquimbo, Tocopilla, Callao, and Cartagena—all of the great ports and a large proportion of the secondary ports of the southern continent. I saw only one ship, besides the cruiser that carried me, flying the American flag. The voyage of the fleet therefore, will do something to prove to the South Americans that the United States is capable of enforcing the Monroe doctrine, and is also content to cherish any friendly little republic on its own account. It is trusted that the proof of the first proposition will not make the Latin Americans any more cocky to European creditors, for they are certainly in no need of a stimulant on that score.

Perhaps the South Americans would be a little more careful in this cheerful repudiation of debt if they knew that it was Great Britain that made the voyage possible in the first place. The United States has no merchant marine of any account, and no colliers, so that the navy department had to beg and borrow from England, Holland, Norway and Italy the grimsy, but indispensable coal carriers that made the voyage possible. Lacking them, the fleet could not have taken coal enroute. We observe in the naval appropriations just passed an item of $1,800,000 for the construction of colliers, so that if another voyage is not necessary for a couple of years the United States will then be able to undertake it without depending upon foreign assistance.

Most valuable has the voyage been in its effect upon the men in the fleet. Out of $3,827 in the United States navy last June, no fewer than 25,761 were serving their first enlistment. Critics who saw the fleet clear at Hampton Roads observed the amateur style of the crews on the sixteen men-o-war. The tars were for the most part tenderfeet, and as awkward aboard ship as a down-east
