COULD NOT BE BETTER.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Chas. W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. I couldn't be any better."

He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by all druggists.

Names of Birds.

Certain birds get their names from St. Peter. According to a writer, "the petrel (in German Petersvogel, Peter's bird), a bird that skims the waves, is named after the apostle who walked upon the waves of Galilee. But the parrot is a less simple case. In Spain and in Portugal, as in France, the word corresponding to 'parrot' almost certainly represents 'little Peter,' a familiar name playfully applied because Peter was so common a Christian name. Similarly a house sparrow is nicknamed 'peter' in France."

A Pink Slipper Comedy

By A. M. Davies Ogden

Copyright, 1905, by A. M. Davies Ogden

"But it is the footprint of an ideal," exclaimed Duverney incisively. "Observe the dainty little toes, the fainter mark which indicates the arch, the slender grace of the whole."

Among a confused mass of footprints this one stood out clear and distinct, and Duverney was kneeling on the sand enthusiastically remarking each beauty. "Can't belong to one of the women at the chateau. Mme. la Comtesse, never; Mme. de Nevers—hum—hardly. Now, if the little American girl had arrived! But I believe she comes not until tomorrow."

"And she is from Chicago, the home of monstrous pedal extremities," said his friend lightly. Duverney smiled.

"True, it could not be she. Indeed, I doubt if this is a woman's foot at all; more likely it belongs to one of those children," indicating a group of merry youngsters playing at the water's edge.

"Well, we had best be going on, too, or Marie will think us lost." Yet still he lingered. "It is a lovely foot," he declared.

"That looks more as though it might belong to your Chicago divinity," jesting Chatillon, pointing to the reproduction of a square toe monstrosity.

"The warm day must have tempted the nymphs to cool their feet," responded Duverney. "Ciel." For as they turned the rocky projection of the little cove the two men found themselves facing a girl, a slender, brown haired girl, who gazed back at them with wide, startled eyes. Every trace of foot was carefully concealed by the white linen skirt she wore, only a small corner of forgotten silk stocking betraying that everything was not in its proper place.

"Ciel," muttered Duverney again, shocked into a sudden sense of her beauty. But the warning flash in the girl's eyes counseled prudence. She must be one of his sister's guests, he reasoned swiftly. Then he would meet her later.

It was tea time before he saw her again. The great hall of the chateau.

"CLOTHES GAVE IT TO YOU?"

With its tapestried walls, huge fireplace of stone and subdued lights filtering through crimson lamp shades, was filled with gay voices and laughter, the bubbling of the tea urn adding a note of homeliness and comfort.

For a second Duverney hesitated, then he crossed the hall and sank into a big chair by her side. She was clad in a fluffy tea gown. She looked very sweet and very young.

"Mademoiselle will have tea?" asked Duverney lazily. "No? Nor cakes? How sensible!" The girl shrugged an indifferent shoulder, but the man, catching the angry little sparkle in her eyes, smiled to himself.

"I think we have met before," he began, conversationally. The girl, her lips parting indignantly, turned, but he met her gaze of one of calm innocence. "Perhaps mademoiselle does not remember. But, indeed, how should she?" with a sigh. The glint in the gray eyes deepened.

"Really," she said. "There were two persons talking near me this afternoon. Perhaps—carelessly, Duverney raised his brows.

"Mademoiselle possibly overheard our foolish chatter," with polite concern. "But surely what we said could not have applied to her." The subtle irony in his tone was not lost on the girl's quick ear. She flushed.

"It happens that I am the little American girl to whom you referred," was her crisp response. "And in my country gentlemen—with emphasis on the word—do not discuss ladies!"

"Feet," suggested Duverney impudently. "How different are the customs of countries! It is a most fascinating study, don't you think?" Miss Henderson surveyed him for a moment; then a faint curve dawned at the corners of her mouth.

"Countries, you mean?" she queried demurely. "Yes, I must confess that I am constantly picking up new and astonishing bits of information over here." A moment longer her eyes lingered on the good looking countenance opposite. After all, though he had come upon her at an awkward moment, it was not entirely his fault. If he had arrived five minutes earlier—Her cheeks grew hot. How could she have been so foolish? But the sight of the children splashing about in the cool sunlight had been too much for her scruples, and, besides, who would have dreamed of any Frenchman dismissing the carriage at the station to walk across the beach? As for his remarks—The smile broke into a bewitching dimple.

"I believe that I will have some tea after all," she said sedately. "Yes, and cakes, too, please. Thanks."

Duverney went to his room that night absolutely bewitched. What a girl! By breakfast time his plans were matured, but to the man's disappointment all his suggestions were negatived. She did not walk or golf or play croquet. Duverney was puzzled, and his bewilderment was deepened when, on arising unusually early a morning of two later, he caught from his window a glimpse of the girl coming briskly down the woodland path. She did care for exercise sometimes, then. Was it that she did not wish to be alone with him? He would try to discover. Accordingly at breakfast he suggested a ride on horseback. The girl hesitated, then yielded. As she ran to change into her riding habit the man smiled a little to himself. At last he must see her feet, but as she put forth her foot for him to gaze at her he started and almost broke his glasses. Instead of the small patent leather boot he had expected, on his hand rested a shoe, well enough made indeed, but clumsy and enormous. Duverney bit his lip.

"You see I uphold the traditions of Chicago," laughed the girl, trying to brave it out. But Duverney was silent.

As she dressed for dinner that night the girl was conscious of a vague dissatisfaction. After all, she need not have worn quite such awful boots. She hurried into her prettiest frock and daintiest slippers. The hall was quite empty save for Duverney, who came forward, his pocket bulging oddly.

"I've got to make a clean breast of it," he said. "I knew that you were playing a trick on me this afternoon, that the big footprints on the sand must belong to the children's nurse. Because—look here," and with a sudden flush he produced from his pocket the tiniest of pink slippers. "When—when I said that I had seen you before I did not mean on the beach," he confessed. "I meant a month ago at Dinard. I had to leave suddenly, but I contrived first to find out who you were and am glad to have Marie meet you. And—and I bribed the chambermaid for this," shamefacedly. "Your—your door was open one day, and I saw it."

"What?" gasped Miss Henderson, in whose mobile face varying emotions were contending. "Clothing gave it to you? Why, she never told me—that is"—suddenly realizing her slip. Duverney bent closer.

"She did tell you other things, then," he asserted eagerly. "What, tell me what?" pulling her gently behind the screen. Miss Henderson hesitated. Impulsively she took a step forward.

"Listen," she began. "I learned that Mme. la Baronne was your sister. I knew you would be here." For an instant the clear eyes dropped in maiden shyness, then, with an adorable smile, she raised her face to him. "I—I also saw you, monsieur," she whispered.

Laundry Marks.

Numbers or letters used by American laundries to distinguish their patrons' garments are disappearing enough, but we are fortunate in that the collars and cuffs do not come back from the wash tagged with the business card of the laundry.

In certain parts of France the name and address of the laundry are stamped on each piece sent home, and should several laundries be patronized, one after the other, a fine collection will soon be found, in addition to geometrical marks indicative of the owner of the garment.

In Russian towns laundry marks are under police supervision. In this manner a refugee who makes his way to another town upon a forged passport is liable to detection unless he can borrow linen with the mark of one of the town laundries upon it.

Bulgarian laundries employ rubber stamps with ornamental designs, while in Germany the laundry comes home tagged with a small cloth label attached with a heat and waterproof cement.

A Subtle Defense.

A few years ago a black woman in Natal was charged with drunkenness. With a surprising grasp of the law, however, she pleaded guilty, but urged that the bench had no power to deal with the charge, as she was on private property. Somewhat chagrined, the police withdrew the charge, but taxed her with being in possession of a quantity of liquor. The defendant in the dock again admitted the charge, but in triumphant tones pointed out that the said liquor was contained within her skin and that such a method of conveyance or possession was not an offense within the meaning of the act.

After such a subtle defense of the lady of much legal learning deserved to escape, but the prosecutor, with a weary smile, inverted the seemingly empty bottle, and to the annoyance of the damsel, who imagined that she had drained it to the last drop, the said last drops slowly dribbled out, and a conviction followed.—Dundee Advertiser.

A Foolish Man's Blunder.

"Well," said Mrs. Happerson, "I'm glad I have at last convinced you that you were mistaken."

"You haven't convinced me," her husband wearily replied. "You have merely shown me that it is foolish to reason with a woman."

After which the argument was resumed at the same old place.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Knew Where He Was.

Some one asked Speaker Reed how he felt while the uproar about the rules of the Fifty-first congress was going on and while the question was in doubt.

"I knew exactly what I was going to do if the house did not sustain me," he replied. "When a man has decided upon a plan of action for either contingency he has no need to be disturbed. Did you ever think what a soothing thing it is to know exactly what you are going to do if things do not go your way? You have then made yourself equal to the worst and have only to wait to find out what was ordained before the foundation of the earth."

"But how did you feel when the tumult was the highest?"

"Just as you would feel if a big creature was jumping at you and you knew just the length of the chain and were quite sure of the weapons at hand."

It was this sureness of footing which gave the iron willed man his marked serenity of temper.

Grateful Husbands in India.

When white people do things for native races the gratitude of those minorities is to some extent quite touching. The report of the hospital for women at Alahabad gives a couple of certificates which illustrate that many a grateful heart beats beneath a swarthy skin. The first is from a husband whose wife had been experimented upon at the institution. He writes:

Dear Sir—My wife has returned from your hospital cured. Provided males are allowed at the bungalow, I would like to do you the honor of presenting myself there this afternoon. But I will not try to repay you—vengeance belongeth unto God. Yours noticeably.

But what doctor would not treasure so eloquently expressed a token of gratitude as this?

Dear and Fair Madam—I have much pleasure to inform you that my dearly unfortunate wife will be no longer under your treatment, she having left this world for the better on the night of 25th ulto. For your help in this matter I shall ever remain grateful. Yours reverently,

A GREAT FAVORITE

The new style double-breasted sack is proving a great favorite with correct dressers. It has extra length, plenty of breadth, wide collar and lapels, and a nine-inch vent in the back, vest cut trifle lower, trousers loose over hips.

It makes up an aristocratic suit in a fancy mixture, or a big plaid, as well as in a plain black or other solid color.

THE T. H. TAYLOR CO'Y

Minnesota's New Capitol.

Artists and architects are agreed that the new capitol of Minnesota at St. Paul is next to the national capitol in Washington the finest public building in America. The secretary of the American Institute of Architects expressed that opinion awhile ago, and in a recent number of the Architectural Record Kenyon Cox, the painter, has declared that it is "one of the most imposing and beautiful of modern classic buildings, sumptuous, yet severe, a model of good taste and restraint." He goes into raptures over the white marble dome, when he writes, "It seems of the colors and almost of the very substance of the sky into which it melts like a snow peak in the horizon."

This architectural masterpiece, which has attracted much attention during its construction, stands in what was a wilderness two generations ago, but with all its beauty and majesty and grace it splendidly illustrates the growth of the great west in all those refinements of taste which are ordinarily regarded as the product of generations of culture.—Youth's Companion.

An Old Pair of Compasses.

One would hardly expect to fish up from the bottom of the sea where the ship of the Spanish armada sank an implement of such excellence and so superior to similar articles of present day manufacture as to be quite worthy of patenting. Such is the case with a pair of compasses brought up from the bottom of Tobermory bay. With compasses of the kind now in common use the legs have to be pulled apart. These armada compasses may be adjusted by the forefinger and thumb of one hand.

Just below the hinge is a sort of split ring. This is revolved to the left to open the compasses and to the right to close them. They have already been patented, and a few copies of the original pair have been made.—New York Tribune.

VARICOCELE & STRICTURE

No other disease is so prevalent among men as Varicocele. As it interferes with the nutrition of the sexual organs it produces weakness, loss of semen through the urine, decay of the organs, pain in the joints, aching in the back, nervousness, dependency, bashfulness, palpitation of the heart, constipation, and a combination of these results in complete LOSS OF MANHOOD. Thousands of young and middle-aged men are troubled with STRICTURE. If you have reason to believe you are afflicted with it, do not neglect it. It will ruin you. Don't let doctors experiment on you by cutting, stretching or tearing it. Our NEW METHOD TREATMENT dissolves the stricture tissue, hence it disappears and can never return. We cure Varicocele and Stricture without operation or loss of time. The treatment may be taken at home privately. Send for our Free Illustrated Book on VARICOCELE AND STRICTURE. WE GUARANTEE TO CURE OR NO PAY.

Kidneys & Bladder

All sexual complaints affect these organs, hence the kidneys are a great source of disease. Have you aching or weakness over the small of the back, tendency to urinate frequently, deposit in urine, coldness of hands or feet, a drowsy feeling in the morning. Don't neglect your kidneys. Our NEW METHOD TREATMENT is guaranteed to cure any disease of these organs or no pay.

No Names Used Without Written Consent.
