Paris in September, 1914

A month ago I spoke of a "sobered Paris," the city of brightness and pleasure wearing its new aspect of self-sacrifice, and sending off its sons to fight with a smile that, in many cases, masked a tear. Now after six weeks of a hand-to-hand struggle with a foe whose numbers are overwhelming and whose skill is not to be despised, the aspect of the French capital has again undergone a change. The greater part of its inhabitants have gone, and during the last few days the different railway stations have presented an extraordinary aspect; whole families seated on the limited amount of luggage that is permitted, have spent hours in the broiling sun to have the privilege of obtaining a place in the third-class carriage of an overcrowded train. Only third-class tickets were delivered and the trains were literally taken by storm! On account of the congested state of the railways journeys that in ordinary times are made in three hours now take two days!

More interesting to study than those who leave are those who remain in the threatened city. These are the poor, the born Parisians who cling to their homes, the few officials whose post is here, and the men and women who, having no distinct duty outside, desire to be useful inside Paris. A wide field of activity is open to the latter, not so much in the way of material assistance, up to the present moment there is no great stress of poverty, but as regards moral influence. Instinctively the people in the suburbs turn to those whose social station and education stamp them as their superiors. There is none of that blustering mistrust of the upper classes that is so offensive in times of peace. A common anxiety binds hearts together. The duchess in her old-world mansion and the bare-headed fruit seller at her door both have their sons at the front. The woman of the people instinctively turns to the great lady for encouragement and sympathy, and the man in the street naturally appeals to his more educated neighbor for his opinion on current events. Simply by remaining where they are, the better class of men and women who are free to do so, may humbly but efficaciously serve God and their country at this terrific crisis. The task is an easy one and those who fulfill it receive more than they give. Paris, in this tragic month of September when the German army is at its gates, belongs to the true Parisians and to them alone. The people of fashion and wealth have gone; the big shops are closed; motor cars still go to and fro, but only in the service of the army and the wounded; the fashionable quarters of the city are deserted in the day and dimly lighted at night when the opprobrious searchlights scour the heavens to discover hostile airships on their way to bombard the city.

But the busy faubourgs still teem with life and the churches are crowded the whole day long. The real soul of the Paris people, the soul not deformed by evil teaching but true to itself, stands revealed under the stress of suspense and anxiety. There is no fear among these women whose husbands and sons are at the front. When the German Taube two days ago flew above us scattering bombs that did little damage, they ran into the street and watched its movements with amused curiosity. For a few days the five o'clock Taube was an expected visitor, and if women's wishes could have brought it down the German airship's flight would have been promptly cut short. But the courage of the Parisienne goes deeper and is of a sterner quality. Neither in the streets, nor the tramways, nor the courtyards where the unemployed women find work, do we hear word of repining. Towards the end of his stay, his old skill in arms won over but just a wunnerin' if ye thought so as the war news is so neatly bloodless 'alleluia' victory,

St. Germanus, Bishop.

In his youth Germanus gave little sign of sanctity. He was of noble birth, and at first practised the law at Rome. After a time the Emperor placed him high in the army. But his one passion was the chase. He was so carried away as even to retain in his sports the superstitions of the pagan huntsmen. Yet it was revealed to the Bishop of Auxerre that Germanus would be his successor, and he gave him the tonsure almost by main force. Forthwith Germanus became another man, and making over his lands to the Church, adopted a life of humble penance. At that time the Pelagian heresy was laying England waste and Germanus was chosen by the reigning Pontiff to rescue the Britons from the snares of Satan. With St. Lupus he preached in the fields and highways throughout the land. At last near Verulam he met the heretics face to face, and overcame them utterly with the Catholic and Roman Faith. He ascribed this triumph to the intercession of St. Alban, and offered public thanks at his shrine. Towards the end of his stay, his old skill in arms won over but just a wunnerin' if ye thought so as the war news is so neatly bloodless 'alleluia' victory, dealt out, and letters from our soldiers are short and rare; but their pain is glorified by a generous patriotism simply expressed. This patriotic feeling is supported and vivified by a strong current of religious faith. For some years past those who watch France from within have known that in spite of her free-thinking Government and its evil laws, a distinct religious revival has been taking place in Paris and in the large centres. It has been brought about by complex causes that we can not examine here but its existence is a fact and the tragedy of war has only expanded and generalized the movement. It is strongly marked in the attitude of our troops, where the soldier-priests are winning golden opinions from their comrades and their chiefs. There are at the present moment fifteen thousand priests, including many religious of different orders, in the ranks, they make, we hear, excellent soldiers and their influence is valued by their chiefs. To a scholarly Dominican, who is now a willing corporal in a marching regiment, his colonel publicly expressed his thanks: "I am grateful to you," he said, "for the uplifting influence you have on my men." We hear of Mass being said in the open air near Nancy on August 30, before the troops. The army chaplain celebrated the Holy Sacrifice, the soldier priest led the singing in which the men joined. When the Hall Marys had been recited for the dead the chaplain turned round: "Gentlemen," he said, "au revoir till next Sunday, if it is God's good pleasure that we should still be alive."

The same "strong cry" rises from the crowded Paris churches, from Montmartre, whose white cupolas seem to protect the threatened city, from Notre Dame des Victoires, the beloved shrine that now especially is a perpetual blaze of light, each of which represents a prayer from the martyrs, where the rosary is recited for the soldiers at the front.

The Government of France carefully abstains in its proclamations from pronouncing the name of God, but, painful though the omission may be to those who believe, they are upheld by the prayerful spirit of the nation at large. The Government does not represent the real soul of France; it is represented by the soldiers at the front; by the brave workers in the Paris suburbs, who out of their poverty help their neighbors; by the country gentlemen who, if unable to serve in the ranks, assist the peasants to bring in the harvest; by the soldier priests whose cheerful acceptance of their new duties is a continual apostleship.

According to Our Capacity
If our Communion are almost useless and without fruit, I venture to say, says Lallemand, it is only for want of preparation; for if we prepare ourselves for them as we ought, we should soon be holy. The reason of it is that the causes act always according to the disposition of the subject upon which they operate. Thus the Blessed Sacrament produces different effects, because it does not find the same disposition everywhere. If you prepare yourself a little, it will produce little; if you bring much preparation for it, it will produce more. The larger the vessels are, the more water they receive from the fountain; nay, even more at a single time than a shell would receive in a hundred. So it is with this source and fountain of graces. The more loving you are the better preparation you will make, and the greater will be your capacity for receiving.

Sandy applied at the store for a job. The manager, after asking him a few questions, set him to work, bidding him to lift a heavy desk up on to a stand. Sandy struggled vainly with the job, and said: "I told ye me name, sir, did I no?" "Yes," replied the manager. "You said it do we hear word of repining. Towards the end of his stay, his old skill in arms won over but just a wunnerin' if ye thought so as the war news is so neatly bloodless 'alleluia' victory, so said Samson."

called because the newly-baptized Britons, led by the Saint, routed the enemy with the Paschal cry. Germanus visited England a second time with St. Severus, and dealt the heresy its death-blow. He died A. D. 448, while interceding with the Emperor for the people of Brittany.

St. Germanus knew well that the best means, to protect the British against heretical teachers would be a sound and careful instruction in Catholic truth. On his second visit, therefore, he established seminaries throughout the land. These schools soon became famous; those of Ross and Henton on the Wye in Herefordshire alone contained one thousand scholars. Among the many Saints educated by them were SS. Maglorius, Malo and David. "By means of these schools," says St. Bede, "the Church continued ever afterwards pure in the faith and free from heresy."

A School of Virtue.

Holy Communion is more than a remedy. It is, says Pere Eymard, a strengthening power, aiding us to become good, virtuous, and holy. It is indeed, a difficult thing to acquire a Christian virtue. A virtue is a quality of Jesus with which we must clothe ourselves. It is a divine education, the manners of Jesus in us. Now, in Holy Communion, Jesus forms Himself in us, becomes our true Master. By His loving inspirations, He awakens the gratitude that we owe Him as to our Benefactor, the desire to remember Him, the thought of the happiness there is in imitating Him, and living of His life. What charms virtue has in the school of Communion! How easy is humility when we have communicated, when we have seen the God of glory humbling Himself so far to enter a heart so poor, a mind so ignorant, a body so miserable! How easy is gentleness under the action of the tender kindness of Jesus giving Himself to us in the sweetness of His Heart! How beautiful the dear neighbor becomes in our eyes when we behold him feeding on the same Bread of Life, seated at the same Divine Table, and loved with so much effusion by Jesus Christ! Penance, mortification, and sacrifice lose their bitterness when we have received Jesus Crucified!

He--"You look to me older than you said you were."

Good Health Is Impossible Without a Healthy Action Of The Kidneys
When the kidneys begin to "act up" and fail to filter the blood through them, there passes into the system uric acid and other virulent poisons, which will cause some of the severest and most deadly diseases known to mankind.

On the first evidence of the approach of kidney trouble Doan's Kidney Pills should be used, and serious trouble avoided. Mr. Israel Drost, Bath, N.B., writes: "I am sending you this testimonial telling you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me. My kidneys were so bad I was helpless for about two months. I used several kinds of pills, but none of them seemed to be doing me any good. At last, I was advised to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. When I had taken the first box I found relief, and then I got another, and by the time I had taken it, I was completely cured."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

STIR THE LIVER UP BY THE USE OF Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are a medicine for all these troubles, and have been used for close on to twenty years by many people for these complaints.

Patience--"What are the three popular methods of communication for gossips?"
Patricia--"How should I know?"
Patience--"Over the telegraph, over the telephone, and over the garden wall."

Harry Lauder has had his "bumps" felt by a phrenologist, who found that one of his chief characteristics was generosity. But, of course, a phrenologist is specially privileged to touch people.

BEWARE OF WORMS.
Don't let worms gnaw at the vitals of your children. Give them Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup and they'll soon be rid of these parasites. Price 25c.

Brown--"Of course you went up the Rhine?"
Jones--"By Jove, yes! What a view from the summit!"

Cynicus--"It is impossible for a woman to keep a secret."
Henpeck--"I don't know about that; my wife and I were engaged for several weeks, before she said anything to me about it."

A SENSIBLE MERCHANT.
Milburn's Sterling Headache Powders give women prompt relief from monthly pains, and leave no bad after effects what ever. Be sure you get Milburn's price 25 and 50 cts.

Dare to be true; nothing can need a lie;
A fault which needs it most grows two thereby.
George Herbert.

There is nothing harsh about Laxa-Liver Pills. They cure Constipation, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, and Bilious Spells without griping, purging or sickness. Price 25 cts.
