For the Signal.

On the Death of Mary E. Quipp.

Little Mary slumbers sweetly,
In her lonely, narrow bed;
Pelting storms and howling tempests,
Can not reach her little head.
Sweet affection drops a tear,
O'er the spot where Mary lies;
Angels whisper, look up yonder,
Pointing to the skies.

On our memories deeply graven,
Stands her little image fair;
Sparkling eyes and shining temples,
Rosy cheeks and shining hair;
Ruby lips so full of smiling,
Neck and arms of spotless white,
Little feet so full of running,
Little Mary was so bright.

On the table lies her bible,
To the chair is which she sat;
On the nail in yonder corner,
Hangs her little hat;
O, remove these sad memorials,
Lay them carefully away,
Christ be thou our consolation,
In this dark and gloomy day.

Little Mary slumbers sweetly,
In her lonely, narrow bed;
Pelting storms and howling tempests,
Can not reach her little head.
On that bright and glorious morning,
Christ will whisper from above,
"Rise my child and let me dress thee,
In robes of white and spotless love."
