Prospero Here.

The S. S. Prospero, Capt. A. Kean, arrived here at 7.15 p.m. yesterday with a full cargo. The ship left here on Thursday, the 14th inst. While the ship was discharging her freight and taking on more at Little Bay, the captain received a message ordering him to the rescue of the two men cast away (as it was thought) on White Island. The ship went direct there, and on that account on the return journey there was great trou-ble in handling the freight, as owing to a reversal of the order of calling at the different ports this caused a vexatious delay, and Capt. Kean says that the crew handled most of the cargo three times on the run. The Straits of Belle Isle is full of Arctic ice and the ship could not proceed fur-ther north than Griquet. It was ex-tremely cold and the steamer was 4 hours making one mile in Stag Har-bor Run which was blocked with drift ice which though not heavy was pack-ed tight on the land. Over fifty pas-sengers who were to disembark at ports north of Little Bay were taken along to Griquet when the ship was ordered there, and these were landed at their respective ports as the ship was returning. The ship was a week going from Little Bay to Griquet and return, and leaving Monday night did not get back till that night week. The assengers alluded to just got to the Prospero's passengers were:—Messr Prospero's passengers were:—Messrs.

The Prospero Rescues Men

From Capt. Kean, of the Prospero. we learn that the two men, Albert Bussey and Edward Humby, who were caught on White Island and who were fore the Prospero got to Griquet on her second last trip north. White Is-land is 4 miles off the main land. Slob passing up out of the Straits closed in on the Island and prevented them from getting off it to the main land. They shot numerous birds and left 55 behind them when the Prospero took them off. There was a tilt on the leand in which the them off. There was a tilt on the Island in which they sheltered out of storms and sheltered at night. Their fuel ran short, however, and as the Island is barren they could not relenish it and consequently suffered uch from cold, and were extremely glad when they trod the friendly deck of the ship. They had demolished their boat as a last resort to give no-tice to the people on shore by setting it on fire, of their predicament. They were not much the worse of their ex-perience, being men inured to cold and At the Concert on next Sunday af-
