TRAINS.

By GEORGE FITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Slwash."

Trains are used to transport freight and passengers, mentioned in the order of their importance, from hither to you. At this particular minute let us consider passenger trains.

A passenger train consists of an engine, a baggage car, a conductor, a peanut salesman, a brakeman with throat trouble and several passenger coaches. It is operated on what is known as a schedule, which is America's most popular work of fiction. The schedule shows the time at which the prospective passenger should arrive at the station in order to get a good seat near the stove in the waiting room.

Passenger trains are divided into three classes—limited, local and accommodation trains. Limited trains are very fast and only stop for crossings, semaphores, side tracks, cows on the track, hot boxes, orders and coal. They are very luxurious, and are supposed to get you to your destination on time, for which you pay from $5 to $10 extra. This explains the "limited" part. You have to ante before you get on, and there is a $10 limit.

Local trains stop at all stations and elsewhere, and are very careless, losing ten minutes here and thirty minutes there with the utmost unconcern, like a messenger boy. They are patronized by the plain people, and are afflicted with prehistoric coaches and newsboys who prey on the passengers and sell them peanuts, figs and Elinor Glyn's latest works in a horse whisper at the end of the car. Local trains run from "Aoughwaw to Streech," according to the brakeman, and the next station is "Arglouuuuu." If a man is stubborn about it he can reach almost any town in the country on a local train. A man once travelled from New York to San Francisco on a local train, but it took so much time that he had to walk back.

Accommodation trains are composed of freight cars and a caboose, in which passengers ride on the floor and the ceiling alternately. Accommodation trains are so named because they frequently wait on a side track while a farmer's hogs get fat enough for him to ship with profit. Waiting for an accommodation train and waiting for a new comet are two operations requiring more misgirded patience than anything else on record.

Passenger trains transport their patrons to terrestrial points for from two to three cents a mile, and to the Great beyond occasionally without extra charge. In the middle west the rate is two cents a mile, but in the sparsely settled east the poverty-stricken lines manage to get three cents a mile in most instances.

Apology.

Whereas I entered Mrs. Tapper's house on Christmas morning while in a state of intoxication and there made use of language which seriously reflected upon the reputation of Mrs. Tapper and her two daughters, and whereas owing to misunderstanding a question addressed to me by the Court, I repeated the Slander in Court. Now I hereby unreservedly withdraw the statement made by me in the Court and beg to state that I know nothing whatever that can in any manner reflect upon the good name of Mrs. Tapper or her two daughters. I regret that I should be the cause of annoyance or trouble to them, and I beg to tender to them this apology for my conduct. I further undertake to pay all the costs of these proceedings.

FRANCIS BRADBURY,
St. John's, January 12th, 1916.

BALMY PEACE.

Oh, I believe in Balmy Peace; I wish to see War's horrors cease; I wish to see the sabre made into the farmer's pruning blade, and every gun that thunders now, I fain would change into a plow. I'd like to see the king embrace, with rapture glowing in each face, and swear by Heck and Halldome, to keep their warlike hosts at home. And all my days I shall devote to robbing warfare of its goat; I hope to see the nations stand like loving brothers hand in hand, remote from bitterness and strife—and to that end I pledge my life. I now am ready to orate in any town, in any state, which will put up a hundred wheels and guarantee me bed and meals. I ask the money in advance, because I cannot take a chance on being stung by hayseed grads which hate to jar loose from the scads. Best be the day when warfare ends! If you believe in peace my friends, and hope to see the whole world free, arrange a lecture date for me, and I from war will take a fall, in schoolhouse, church or village hall, in tabernacle, tent or manse—the money strictly in advance.
