THE GIANT.

Herr Sigmund Brietbart is no more, he's in his winding sheets and ne'er again will people roar approval of his e a t s. The strongest man in all the world, he wore a string of bells, and hefty cannonballs he hurled, as you'd throw peanut shells. One day he stood, a figure grand, 'gainst whom none might prevail; and as he stood he scratched his hand upon a rusty nail. It was the sketchiest of wounds, it scarcely made him swear; and Sigmund raised two thousand ounds above him in the air. He ield two stallions which came wild and plunging from their stalls; he played with anvils as a child might cratch a little germ began to brew
