THE DEAL PRESIDENT.

A FUNERAL DISCUSSION FROM LONG BRANCH OF WASHINGTON.

The Tributes of a People's Sorrow—Toronto's Meeting of Sympathy—The Feeling Abroad—Garfield's Speech to His Countrymen—The Remains of the late president were conveyed yesterday from Long Branch to Washington.

The mayor, who had just arrived after a long journey in time to be present, took the lead in a little after eight o'clock, and will cause even those who were once merely regarded as acquaintances to exhibit a sympathy from which would grow up lasting friendships, so in the timely of nations it might be hoped that this, this plain, this deep-felt sympathy might be fraught with some permanent advantage—that they might realize their unity, that they might learn a lesson from their grief, and sorrow as it was, which should not pass away with the occasion, but which should, in the development of a Christian unity, feeling among the peoples of the world.

A resolution of condolence with the bereaved relations of the president was then carried. James Beatty, Q. C., and Hon. Mr. Howells were appointed delegates to attend the funeral.

THE FUNERAL TRAIN. Preparations for Leaving Long Branch—Religious Services at the Cottage.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 21.—At 8.45 o'clock the arrangements were all completed and notice given that those so desiring might view the remains of the late chief magistrate. A line was formed and people passed in single file through the cottage.

Two sentinels were stationed at each side of the entrance to prevent more than one person entering at a time. The casket was very unpretentious, being covered with rich black cloth, and with the exception of a few flowers, which were placed on the casket, the only decoration was a large V-shaped sash upon which extends from the foot of the casket upwards. The president was dressed in the suit of clothes he wore on inauguration day. The left hand was laid across his breast. The body was so greatly shrunken that artificial means had to be resorted to in order to give the clothes the appearance of fitting. It is said that Mrs. Garfield was heavily wept when she saw the body in even a more emaciated state.

THE SERVICES. At half-past nine Chief Justice Waite, the members of the cabinet, and their wives arrived at Franklin cottage. The doors were closed to visitors. Religious services were conducted at the request of Mrs. Garfield by Rev. Charles Young, Long Branch. There were fifty persons present, members of the cabinet and their wives, and a few personal friends. When the moment for the services was announced, the windows and doors were closed and all sounds were hushed. Owing to the necessity of starting the train promptly, the services were limited to five minutes.

THE FUNERAL TRAIN. Immediately after the services Mrs. Garfield, accompanied by her son Harry and daughter, General Swain, Colonel and Mrs. Rockwell, Dr. Bowler, and other members of the cabinet and their wives followed, and took seats in the second coach. Mrs. Garfield was heavily veiled, and in passing to the train exhibited the same fortitude which characterized her manner throughout. He was in the train private Secretary Brown, Warren Young, John R. Van Wormer, chief clerk of the post-office department, and other members of the cabinet and their wives followed, and took seats in the second coach.

THE ROUTE TO WASHINGTON. Manifestation of the People's Affection, Sympathy and Sorrow. WASHINGTON, Sept. 21.—The special train bearing the remains of the late president, which left Elberon at 10 a.m., reached Washington at 4.35 p.m. The passage from Elberon to Washington was one continued manifestation of sympathy for the fallen chief magistrate. In the smaller cities, and even in the country through which the mournful train passed, demonstrations of sympathy were everywhere present. In the larger cities multitudes of people assembled, and stood silent, with heads uncovered, and hands raised, while the tolling of bells, flags at half-mast, and the funeral dirges which covered many buildings, all added to the solemnity of the occasion.
