AN OLD WOMAN'S TALE.

t is an old tale, the experience of age striving in vain to temper the enthusiasm of youth. I am a mother now, and a sedate matron may well sigh to remember how she loved to think her old friends splenetic through infirmity, dearly as she loved them; rather than abate one atom of the fairy visions which danced around her. And when the arch-enchanter, love, waved his wand and bathed earth and sea have brought her back to the sober hues of

In the arrogance of youth, of beauty, we forget that our kind monitor has felt as we feel the same fond trust, the same costation the confidence of his wife was gone forfeel the same fond trust, the same ecstatic hope, and can say: "I, too, shepherd, in Arcadia dwelt."

"Do not grieve, dear grandma; I shall not leave you for a long time yet; and," I added, pressing her hand in both mine, "I shall see you very often."

Here my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears began to flow, for in the my own tears to be the my own tears to be permitted between you. Unless a man confides in his wife he does both her and shall see you very often."

Here my own tears began to flow, for in the engrossment of my new feelings I had scarcely dwelt on the severing of cld ties, which my new engagement would involve. "It is no selfish grief that thus afflicts me," said my beloved monitor. "I would not cloud your young spirits, nor dim the hopes which are said to bless the morning of life and fit us for the burden and heat of the day; but you, my Grace, remind mejor ny cherished daughter Agnes, whose early death you have often heard me lament. I will now tell you something of her life, and if it make you rejoice with trembling anid your present happiness, that happiness will be more likely to endure. From her infancy I had watched over Agnes with amore fearful tenderness than any other stangely made up of quick and joyous impulse and deep, unsuspected feeling. She seemed altogether without that cowardice sc often attributed to woman as a reproach, but which, in a world of dangers, often wisdom. Meanness and cunning she scorned, and the petty artifice so common in both sexes was never found in her. Her spirits were high and untamable—sometimes to wildness; but if unkindly or harshly rebuked, none so utterly subdued. Can you wonder, then, that I watched over her as if she were some precious vessel sent out on a sea full of rocks, quick-sands and whirlpools? I used often to pray that, be her lot in life what it might be, she might ever feel the balm of loving looks and kind words."

""And what was her lot in life dear of the lot of the law for a woman to "bang her heir." Then he doubled the amount of her bail.

was his. I say danger, because she was too young to encounter the cares of married life, and the uncertainties of trade press heavily on the wife of a merchant. She suffers from the variation of her husband's spirits, and she is a highly favored woman if his temper, too, do not suffer; and my Ages' tender yet high spirit was, I knew, ill-fitted for such trials. Arthur was an intelligent young man, of high character, and most honorable in all his dealings. It was, however, his misfortune to have for a mother a weak and irritable woman, whom presperity has not improved. She was surrounded with blessings, but was constantly complaining, and as her education hall not strengthened her in mind, nor a watchful self-denial improved her heart, she was likely to impress upon her son's mind a very low opinion of all women. I, my dear Grace, was honored by my husband with his entire confidence, and I tried to return his trust by being indeed a helpmate for him. If a woman does not know the state of her husband's affairs, she is defrauded of what is justly her due—the privilege of advising with him and of uniting with him in his efforts ahe is defrauded of what is justly her due—the privilege of advising with him and of uniting with him in his efforts to do justly to all men. About a year after Agnes' marriage, the crisis occurred in the commercial world which laid many lofty houses low. I often surprised Agnes in tears, but she said nothing to me, and I have always made it a principle not to inquire into family secrets. I have seen so much evil from the well meaning but ill judged reluctance which many a mother feels to give up to her daughter's hus-feels to give will not regret it.

The latest attraction of the "personally conducted" tours to Paris from England is a visit to the morgue, with a survey of the authentic corpses freshly fished up from the Scine. The Englishman's idea of pleasure is to go out and kill something, and in lieu of opportunity to beguite his time in that way, the sight of something in the feels to give up to her daughter's hus-feels to give up to band in good faith and sincerity the secrets of that daughter's heart. But one day my Agnes came to my house and rushed upstairs to my bedroom. I followed her and secured the door, and I was then grieved to hear her sobbing bitterly and in agony of sorrow.

P.Q., writes: "I have been afflicted with rheumatism for the last ten years, and have tried many remedies without any relief. I got a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, and found it gave instant relief, and since then have had no attack. I would recommend it to all."

Bridget: "Wet's the met."

my darling? Confide in your mother, and perhaps I may be able to console you."

"th! my husband, my husband! He has used me cruelly; he has not been open with me; he might have told me the state of his affairs. I am not a child. I could live anywhere the doctor is not a child. I could live anywhere the pole with this orule reserve—oh, it will kill me? "Manes, my child," I answered, 'now' your time of trial. You know where to look for strength; and oh, beware of a relook for strength; and oh, beware of a relook for strength; and he had live anywhere to look for strength; and he had live any with you until his affairs are arranged one way or other. I am more hurt by his allowing me to learn all this from a stranger than shocked at his ruin; for we are both young and may hope for better times. But oh, mother, there are many things which I might have donce without, and sow the people will usupert time of having known our circumstances all along, and I shall have the disgrace of being suspected of dishonesty."

wronging any tradesman; but do not injure your health by this violent grief. You are, whatever happens, our dearly beloved daughter, and now, for Grace's sake, and for your father's and mine, try to compact yoursel.
