REMARKABLE TURBINE WHEEL OF AN ENGLISH INVENTOR.

Other Novelties of Note-Unique Contri vances for Workshop and Laboratory-

Trials were recently made at Newcas-Trials were recently made at Newcastle-on-Tyne of the "steam turbine" of the English inventor, Parsons, and were most successful. It has no more complexity than a Boyden water wheel, says George H. Knight in The Cosmopolitan, and its extreme fewness of parts (ueither valve, piston, pitman, connecting-rod crank nor fly wheel) reminds one of the little steam toy of the old Alexandrine philosopher (Hero) of 200 B.C.

The trials at Newcastle-on-Tyne of this unique motor were made under the auspices of J. A. Ewing, professor of engineering of Cambridge University, England, and elicited the following extraordinary results: The consumption of England, and elicited the following extraordinary results: The consumption of steam—alike at half and full loads—is, per foot pound, about the same as in a well-designed compound engine. It is a notable and interesting fact that this miracle of simplicity solves at a single bound, often striven after, but never satisfactorily accomplished to himself, (that is, economically), by James Watts—a rotary steam engine. Owing to its high speed and its rotary motion, the device seems admirably fitted for dynamo propulsion; and we find that, in the test mentioned, the "steam turbine" was attached to the shaft of a powerful dynamo of the alternating current type—turbine and armature revolving together with a velocity of 4800 revolutions per minute, generating a potential of 5000 volts, with a yield of 100 kilowatts (100 board of trade units) of electrical energy per hour. A re-100 kilowatts (100 board of trade units) of electrical energy per hour. A remarkable fact, taken in connection with the high velocity, was the low steam pressure, 95 pounds per square inch, employed; and still another was that, although the engine rested on a simple concrete floor, without hold down bolts or special foundation, the machine ran almost without vibration. In the test mentioned the steam exhausted into a condenser—a refinment on Mr. Parson's previous structures of the same type, which discharged into the air.

A READY WATER MOTOR.

A Handy Thing That Can be Useful in Every Home. The ease and simplicity with which such a motor as the one shown in the illustration may be set up and utilized to do a great variety of work will be apparent at a glance. Supposing the house or shop to be supplied with water under pressure, the motor is preferably secured in position at a washstand, sink, or building the fittings being adjustable to hydrant, the fittings being adjustable to all sizes of faucets or spigots without

A CONVENIENT WATER MOTOR. alteration: It is then connected by a light belt with sewing machines, fans, egg beaters, coffee mills, ice cream freezers, churns, or with lathes, dental engines, scroll saws, washing machines, printing presses, etc. It is made in two sizes, one with a 5½-inch wheel, for light work, and another with a 15-inch wheel, for heavy work.

A NEW CARBONMETER. A Little Device That Registers the Air's

Impurities. The accompanying cut from the Medi-The accompanying cut from the Medical Record shows a cheap device for determining the excess of carbonic acid in the atmosphere, in school rooms, sick rooms, hospitals, mines, tenement houses, etc., where absolute accuracy is not required. While the thermometer shows the temperature of a room, the barometer the density of the air, and

A SIMPLE CARBONOMETER. the hygrometer its moisture, there has been no simple device for testing its pollution as the result of combustion or pollution as the result of combustion of respiration.

Each apparatus consists of a glass test tube about five and a half inches long and nine-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, together with a smaller tube about six inches long, contracted about one inch from either end, with a valvular rubber builb and tube to attach; also a rubber ring to fix its depth in the test tube, a wooden and wire stand for supporting it, with a small bottle each of lime water and vinegar, and a little porting it, with a small bottle each of lime water and vinegar, and a little brush for cleaning the test tube.

Fill the test tube for about one inch, up to the horizontal line, with a perfectly clear saturated solution of lime water; take the smaller tube with bulb attached, adjust the rubber ring so that it will hold the tube about three-eighths of an inch from the bottom of the test tube; gently compress the rubber bulb till all the air is expelled and then allow tube; gently compress the rubber bulb till all the air is expelled and then allow it to fill again with moderate rapidity, and so continue as often as desired. If, after filling and discharging the bulb six or eight times, the opacity of the lime water obscures the black spot on the base of the stand, the air is absolutely unfit to inhale; and if; after filling the bulb 15 or 20 times, the black spot is obscured, the observer looking downward from the top of the test tube through the lime water, the air if unfit for continuous respiration. In good air for continuous respiration. In good air the spot ought not to be obscured in 30 or 40 fillings of the bulb, and in orre air not at all.
