Standing on an island in the river Nile, near the city of Cairo, the broad stream spread itself out at our feet. You may see, tied here and there by the shore, small sail boats with slender, slanting masts, such as were used thousands of years ago by Egyptian and Hebrew business men in

A beautiful Hebrew legend says that the daughter of Pharaoh was a leper, and that, by advice, she was bathing in the Nile for a cure. Day after day, she bathed, yet her plague grew no better, and there was nothing but darkness in the prospect before her. But on the day when she saw the weeping babe in the ark of bulrushes and, forgetting her own trouble, put forth her hand to help the little one, in an instant the plague left her and she became perfectly well. The old legend enshrines the truth, that the surest way to find relief from one's own troubles and win the highest joy is by bringing help to others.
