

ed me! If any thing dreadful has really—really—

I left, half-distracted to think of the impossibility of fulfilling the promise I had made her, as well as of accounting satisfactorily for not doing so. What could I do? I drove rapidly homewards, and requested my wife to hurry down immediately to Miss Dudley, and pacify her with saying that her father was riding round with me, for the sake of exercise, and that we should come to her together. I then hurried through my professional calls, and repaired to Mr. Dudley. To my unutterable joy and astonishment, I found him up, dressed—for his clothes had been drying all night—and sitting quietly by the fire, in company with the medical man. His appearance exhibited no traces whatever of the accident which had befallen him. But, alas! on looking close at him—on examining his features—Oh, that eye! that smile! That told of departed reason!—I was grieved on as an idiot! Oh, God! What was to become of Miss Dudley? How was I to bring them face to face? My knees smote together while I sat beside him but it must be done, or Miss Dudley's life would be the forfeit! The only project I could hit upon for disguising the frightful state of the case, was to hint to Miss Dudley, if she perceived any thing wild, or unusual in his demeanour, that he was a little flustered with wine! But what a circumstance to communicate to the dying girl! And even if it succeeded, what would ensue on the next morning? Would it be safe to leave him with her? I was perplexed and confounded between all these painful conjectures and difficulties!—To be concluded in our next.
