High Commission gets new home

able restoration of 00-year old building and purchased the building in 1977 from the Sisters of Mercy.

In addition, Guyanese architect, George Henry of George Henry Associates had done a remarkable job to restore the structure that now stood as a landmark of Georgetown. Mr Graham commented.

Mr Graham said that during the renovation period the contractors, Taylor Woodrow International and the architects were undergoing some very anxious moments as there were crises of certain required materials and installations.

The Canadian High Commissioner extended his gratitude to President Forbes Burnham, the Guyana

Foreign Ministry, the Canadian government, the Bank of Guyana, the Guyana Electricity Corporation [GEC] Guyana Stores Limited, Guyana National Engineering Corporation [GNEC], the architects, contractors, carpenters and all the Canadians who worked on the renovation project.

Special mention was made of the Head of the Chancery, Ted Fleming, the Office Manager, Dick Oastler and Communications Adviser Allan McLean of Canada who all gave stalwart services.

The Canadian High Commission had now been rehoused at the new Chancery, after 14 years at the Bank of Guyana building.

Cde George Henry, the Architect, said that the new Chancery had helped to beautify our surroundings and to share in a revival exercise of our heritage.

He said that the restoration of the building was a deep sense of pride and achievement.

The cutting of the ribbon was done by Guyanese Lynette Heath, secretary of the Canadian International Development Agency [CIDA], Canadian High Commission. Lynette, who has been working for the High Commission for 16 years now, was among the first Guyanese to be employed by the High Commission. Suse Parasrath.
