

Table 44 shows that few respondents believe that if they became unemployed they could take advantage of either federal (23%) or provincial (30%) adjustment programs. For federal programs, residents of Quebec (30%) were the most optimistic about access, while Atlantic (15%) residents were the most pessimistic. For provincial programs Ontarians (32%) were the most positive about access, while Atlantic (25%) residents were again the most negative.

