BIG SHIPS ARE DOOMED

Sir Percy Scott Believes That Money for Construction Could Go to Better Use.

London, Sept. 3.—The campaign for administrative economy is gaining momentum daily. Andrew Bonar Law, Government leader in the House of Commons and J. Austen Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, came to London yesterday especially to hold a meeting of the cabinet, which included Earl Curzon, president of the council, and Government leader in the House of Lords, and George Nicoll Barnes, minister without portfolio. It is understood that the discussion was particularly devoted to the question of how far it would be possible to reduce estimates.

There is much talk of a possibility of scrapping the navy, half of which is already obsolete, on the ground that a big navy is not required now, and that the money could be better employed in other ways. He does not, however, agree with all of Baron Fisher's proposals.
