

The Need of Men and Money.

Peace is practicable, but it will not come without earnest effort on the part of those who believe in its possibility.

The fomenters of War are outspoken and active. The lovers of Peace must be no less so.

There is a large body of unspoken conviction among the statesmen, jurists, preachers, teachers, business men, professional men and labor organizations of this country on the side of Peace.

Is not this the time for such conviction to find expression, and what better organ for its expression could be created than an active, persistent, intelligent Peace Society?

The workers for peace are helpless without money. The militarizers have endless resources to effect their purpose. Churches now lavish money to extend their borders over the sea. Shall not the lovers of Peace loosen their purse strings at last for a positive propaganda to preserve Canada from this horror? Give her a chance to fulfil her high destiny, and to work with others to save the Empire and the world from "men who delight in war."
