

Fellowship of Dogs

I have seen a few wretches in my day; but I never saw one so utterly lost to decency that he could not be battered by the friendly attentions of a strange dog, says a writer in the Cultivist. There is a great lesson in that. No matter how superior we try to seem to ourselves and others, a small voice within us will not let us wholly forget what humbugs we are. In the presence of our kind we are brazen. The calm gaze of a child sometimes shakes our self-confidence; the knowing look of a dog shatters it. There is something in brute psychology that perplexes the intellect of man and disorganizes his intuition. Man is so made that what he cannot understand exercises greater influence over him than that which he can. In the presence of many phenomena he reveals himself openly and quite unconsciously. He is then no longer master of the fortifications of his soul. He drops his mask—his grotesque outer garb—his brazen shields fall to the ground, and he either cowardly retreats or succumbs without resistance.

There is some hope for the man who is capable of feeling ashamed in the presence of an honorable dog. That man has avenues open to him for advancement. His soul is still fit for expansion. His brain is something more than a dried nut. His heart has not turned entirely into a thing of rubber and valves. When a strange dog greets him he thinks better of himself. Unconsciously he reasons: "Villain that I am, I am not so bad, after all, as I might be. You can't fool a dog, and a dog is no hypocrite; therefore I have good in me which he recognizes." The fellow is a little surprised at himself and not a little flattered. If a noble dog shows him marked favor he becomes stuck up almost immediately. If several dogs should display great preferences and affection for his person he would soon become unendurable to society—quite too vain for association with men. Contrariwise, should dogs bark at him generally, or perchance, should one bite him, he would not feel himself good enough to associate with snakes; but would forthwith get himself locked up as a victim of hysterical rabies; and, if he had any pathetic kink at large, they would at once insist upon having the dog put to death.

For my own part, I have learned a great deal from dogs. If I am natural they set me the example in early childhood. If I am faithful to a friend through his disgrace and disaster, I cannot deny that dog reveals this nobility of character to me for the first time in my life. If I have gratitude, I saw it first in a dog. If I have enterprise, he did not neglect my early lessons. If I have initiative, so had my first dog friend; if I am affectionate, so was he. If I am patient in adversity and without arrogance in affluence, I could not have acquired that poise of mind better from men than from dogs. If I am watchful over weakness entrusted to my care, I am forgetful of self in guarding my beloved; if I have the courage of my convictions, if I have an heroic instinct, I could have had no better teacher than a dog. Indeed, the love of dogs, their association and example, have filled my life with joy.

Isle of Entente Cordiale

A red granite rock lapped by warm seas. A coast line, stern, rugged, and menacing, holding close within its min- atory borders a succession of entrancing bays and sheltered coves, and an interior of fertile valleys, pregnant slopes, and green lanes.

Such is Jersey! In these winter days when men shiver and wrap themselves in their topcoats around them, the Gulf Stream gives Jersey soft winds and balmy air, fields already flourishing in new foliage, crops peeping from the ground and trees flourishing and blooming in semi-tropical luxuriance.

It is difficult to realize that this place is only a night's journey from London. All around speaks of a different life, a life no more French than English, but possessing a distinctiveness of its own. The Breton peasant works in the fields in his characteristic garb. The houses rising in sharp terraces from the sea bespeak in their proportions a goodly prosperity. The old forts and great sea walls and embankments tell of medieval fighting days. Sprung from old France, long member of the household of England, Jersey stands between both, a mingling of the sister nations.

The stranger who comes to Jersey for the first time must be careful not to fall into certain common mistakes. First, he must not suppose that Jersey and her near neighbor Guernsey have anything in common. Such an idea is scouted by both. A deadly and long standing rivalry exists between the two isles. For centuries it has been a point of honor with them to differ in everything. Each has its own Lieutenant-Governor, its own administration, and its own ways. The Jurats and Bailiffs of Jersey have no more authority over Guernsey than over the Isles of Man.

Nor must the stranger imagine that Jersey is in any way subject to England. It is true that the Duke of Normandy, who claimed to be overlord of the island, conquered England. But, as your Jersey man argues with invincible logic, the conquest of England by their ruler did not make England conqueror of them, but rather the reverse.

The Parliament of England has no authority in Jersey, although the King through his Privy Council has. Jersey has home rule in the most absolute form, guaranteed by many kings as reward for her great services to the Empire in the past. The island is outside the British revenue system, and the happy residents are mulcted of neither income tax, death duties, nor succession duties. The Jersey man's tobacco yields nothing to Somerset House, and his brandy knows no British gauger. Taxation is a very minor trouble. There is a tax on land and property, which is paid by the owner whether his estate is occupied or not. The tenant pays a similar rate, on five per cent. of the value of his goods. This rate varies from 8d. to 1s. 7d. in the pound. Thus, a tradesman holding stock to the value of £1,000 would pay 1s. 7d. in the pound, on five per cent. of that, or say, in all, about 24s. This is the taxpayers' Paradise.

Personal services takes the place of costly taxation. The able-bodied man has to qualify himself to bear arms, by what is practically a system of compulsory volunteering in the Militia, being liable from sixteen to sixty. The prosperous citizen is expected to serve the state without remuneration in offices of public dignity and public labor. Men are taught to esteem the service of Jersey a matter of honor, not of profit. And the man who offends against the common good can be banished.

There are no very rich men on the island, but equally there are no very poor, and the workhouse is unknown. Money goes further. The retired Anglo-Indian finds that £250 a year goes as far as £400 does in England. With a population of only 55,000, the local savings bank boasts deposits reaching £286,000.

This place was made for the holiday-maker tired of strenuous life. Great coves and sheltered inlets invite you to bathe, and romantic names tempt you to explore their depths. Castles and churches replete with memories of Norman strife or Roundhead violence raise their heads. He who is modern can find his pleasure in the famous golf clubs—is not Jersey the home of the Vardon?—can visit the childhood home of Mrs. Langtry, or can enjoy some admirable modern plays in the fine new theatre. But give me the rocks near the sea, where the French shores gleam in the distance under the afternoon sun, and where mild skies and soft air call man to rest.

F. A. McKenzie.

Reform in College Athletics.

The aim of the reforms in school and college athletics should be clearly and directly the betterment of conditions, not the extirpation of the love of combat which is inherent in the nature of mankind. The notion that hard general work, resulting in full muscular development, saps vitality, weakens the organs and is a wearying incubus to the individual is so illogical as hardly to deserve an answer. But some persons believe this. Such should pity the wild animals that, guided only by an instinctive physiological need, run, jump, pursue and wrestle with one another, thereby using and developing fully their whole bodies.—Boston Post.

Different Cries of the Baby.

Normal.—Loud and strong, and the nature of a scream; baby gets red in the face with it.

Pain.—Usually strong and sharp, but not generally continuous; it is accompanied by contortions of the features, drawing up of the legs and other symptoms of distress.

Violent.—Loud and strong and usually violent; accompanied by kicking and stiffening of the body.

Illness.—Usually more of fretfulness and moaning than real crying, although real crying is excited by very slight causes.

Hunger.—Usually a continuous, fretful cry, rarely strong and lusty.

Indulgence or Habit.—Stops short when the baby gets what he wants, only to begin again when the object is withdrawn.—Frank Barkley Copley in "Give the Baby a Chance," in The Outing Magazine for June.

Church and State in France.

The separation of church and state is complete and permanent. There is not the slightest hope, or fear, that it will ever be abolished or weakened. The church must, in such way as it can, live by itself, on its own resources, material or moral. Meanwhile there will be an interval of reflection and planning. The new law as to associations for worship does not go into full effect until December. If by that time the church does not organize, as required, to use the property inventoried, the funds will be turned over to lay charities and most of the buildings will be appropriated to civil uses. That is an alternative that the church will hardly invite.—New York Times.

CONSTIPATION AND HEADACHE

BILEANS A CERTAIN CURE.

The above ailments frequently accompany each other. Indeed the first is the commonest known cause of the second. For both of them Bileans for Biliousness are a cure. To the hundreds of women who suffer from these ailments the following facts will be of interest. Miss A. Campbell, of Moncrieff, Peckham, says: "I suffered some time from constipation and did not seem able to get anything which would relieve me. One morning I awoke with a violent headache, a thing almost unknown to me previously, but I found it had come to stay."

For the next three months it scarcely ceased. Then there came a nasty sickness in the morning, followed by dizziness and, occasionally, fainting during the day. I attended the Women's Hospital for months, after having advice from three doctors. Yet, though at first I benefited by the treatment, I soon went from bad to worse again. My friends told me I looked like death and I think I gave up all hope for I was almost a skeleton, and the pain in my side, due no doubt to liver complaint, was like knives going through me!

After trying everything I could get, and doctor's medicine and hospital treatment so long, with so poor result, I adopted a friend's advice—gave up everything else, and tried what Bileans could do for me.

"They did wonders. I was like a new woman. In two months they cured me, when as doctors had failed to do so in two years. I am writing this letter almost a year after my cure, and during that time I have had no recurrence of my old symptoms. So there is no question as to the permanency of my cure."

Bileans for Biliousness are the product of the latest scientific research. They do not merely purge, and give temporary relief, like the old-fashioned remedies of forty or fifty years ago. They act directly on the liver and digestive organs, strengthening and stimulating them to do their own work, so that further medicine taking becomes unnecessary. They are purely vegetable, contain no harmful drugs, and are a certain cure for indigestion, headache, debility, sickness in the morning, dizziness, wind, pain after food, biliousness, female ailments, blood impurities, and all liver and kidney ailments. Of all druggists at 50 cents per box, or by post free from the Bilean Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price, 6 boxes for $2.50.

How to Shoe Your Horse.

The shoe should be nailed on firmly, with not over six nails, and these driven so that while they take a wide hold of the horn, they come out for clinching low down on the foot, thus minimizing the chances of pricking the sensitive portions, and also enabling the nail holes to quickly grow down and disappear. The nails should be driven with sundry rather gentle taps, rather than with a few blows, as thus any splitting or indentation of the hoof-point may be readily detected; as the animal will flinch before the quick is really touched. The driven nails should not be "drawn" too vigorously in clinching, lest discomfort or pain ensue; should be filed gently, that they may chafe easily; and the clinches themselves hammered smooth, and rasped with as little disturbance of the horn as possible, that the beautiful enamel with which nature has covered all hoofs may be unimpaired.—Frank M. Ware in the Outing Magazine for June.

How Germany Curb Automobiles.

The German Government's proposed way of punishing automobilists who run down the people of the countryside is worth considering. Embodied in a bill is the scheme obliging automobilists to pay life annuities to those dependent on persons killed by their motor cars or to those permanently injured by them. The owners of the cars and not the chauffeurs would be held responsible, and the annuities would be assessed by the courts.—Springfield, Mass., Republican.

Official Tests of Holstein Cows.

Since last report fourteen cows and heifers have been admitted to the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Record of Merit on the strength of officially authenticated tests conducted under the direction and supervision of Prof. Dean of the Ontario Agricultural College. Except where otherwise specified all tests are for a period of seven days. The amounts of milk and butter fat reported are actual; the amount is estimated from the fat by adding one-sixth. Although no phenomenal records are reported, two or three are worthy of special notice, viz., those of Bessie Talmana, 10.91 lbs. of butter; of Oxford Maid, a two-year-old, 17.39 lbs. of butter in 7 days and 72.45 in 30 days; and of Lady Wayne M's. ## The Enemies of the Rose.

Be on the lookout for enemies of the rose. You will have to fight for every fine flower. I have given up the use of hellebore, because it is so unreliable. Paris green is likely to burn the foliage if strong, and if weak it fails to accomplish the purpose for which it is used. I depend on a homemade remedy which is made by melting half a cake of the ordinary size of Ivory soap and mixing it with a teaspoonful of kerosene. Dilute this mixture with ten gallons of water, and apply with a sprayer, being careful to have it get to all parts of the plant. This preparation is far more satisfactory than any of the insecticides for sale by the florists, and will never injure the foliage or flowers. It is a good plan to begin the use of it before the various rose enemies put in an appearance, and keep up its use until their season of activity is over.—Eben E. Rexford in Making the Country Home, in the Outing Magazine for June.

Flowers That Will Not Mix.

A Broadway florist who had just received an order for table decorations called up the customer in haste. "Say," he said, "those bouquets and centrepieces won't last half through the dinner. You've mixed roses and mignonette, and those two flowers simply won't hitch. You'd better let me carry out the designs to suit myself." The customer at the other end of the wire evidently agreed to the suggestion, for the florist hung up the receiver with a satisfied air. "Most people who order flowers make the same mistake that that woman made," he said. "They do not know that certain flowers positively cannot get along together. Take roses and mignonette, for example. Each has a bad effect on the other, and when combined in any floral piece the whole thing wilts in less than an hour."—New York Sun.
