ALREADY ARRIVING

Immigrants in 1913 Are in Canada—Ontario Has Secured Share.

The number of British immigrants who have come to Ontario during the twelve months of 1912 reaches the grand total of 50,277. It also trebles the record of this province for any previous year. During the latter half of the year Ontario received more than sixty per cent. of the entire British immigration received to the Dominion. The Ontario record for the twelve months is as follows: January, 611; February, 1,006; March, 4,508; April, 7,013; May, 7,500; June, 6,007; July, 5,875; August, 6,841; September, 4,188; October, 3,538; November, 2,500; December, 1,536. Total, 50,707.

"Canada will hold the belt for many years to come as the greatest receiver of British immigrants and Ontario will likewise hold its own in this regard over all other provinces of the Dominion," said Robert Birmingham, the Dominion Government immigration head, in remarking on Ontario's magnificent immigration record. "All indications conclusively show that this year will eclipse the great record of 1912."

"The greatest part of it all, however, is the fact that not one of the fifty thousand Britishers that came to Ontario during the year is to the knowledge of this department out of employment. In fact the demand for men is keener now than it ever was. This office was busy all day receiving calls from Ontario farmers in need of help. These farmers are willing to hire a man the year around and give him $300 and board. In the past ten dollars a month during this period of the year was considered good. It is a pretty good indication that the farming industry of Ontario is going ahead. It is due to an extent also to the rapid increase in the number of fruit farmers in the Niagara district. A fruit farmer requires a dozen men where the ordinary farmer would use only two or three."

"There are now thirty steamers weekly handling the British immigration to Canada, and their agents, in addition to the 1,500 agents having connection with the Canadian Government, are conducting a widespread campaign throughout the British Isles. This is the result in a tremendous influx of immigrants to Canada this spring, and makes another record-breaking year certain."

"The first batch of immigrants to arrive this year have already landed. These came by the steamship Potsdam via St. John and the steamship Lake Champlain via Halifax."

A Real Enthusiast.

Who is the most ardent hockey fan in Montreal? asks a writer in The Standard. This is a question that perhaps several thousand people might be willing to answer by rising as one and shouting "I am." But the writer is of the opinion that they are all wrong. The other night he discovered a party whom he thinks to be the greatest hockey enthusiast not only in this city, but in Canada, and that means in the whole world.

This man, unlike you and I patient reader, is not able to see. He lost the sight of his eyes many years ago and yet to-day he rarely misses a game at the Arena. He is a naturally born hockey enthusiast, and here is how he does it.

"A blind fan" if we may be permitted to term him such without fear of discourtesy, is usually accompanied to the big games by a lady who is his wife. So accurately has he developed a sense of acute hearing that to him every sound in the big Arena while the game is on is full of meaning, and requires but small explanation. The sound of the skates on the ice, the tap of the stick of one stick against the puck, the clash of one stick against another as the players check, the intense breathing of the crowd, the shouting as some man breaks away, and the deep throated yell when a goal is scored, all have their meaning to the quiet man who sits up on the west side, and through his sightless eyes pictures in his brain the same scene that you and I see so plainly before us on the ice twice every week.

In the Horse Market?

Francis Henry Shepherd, the newly-elected member of Parliament of Nanaimo, who is one of the solid seven of Government supporters from the Pacific Coast province, although he has been a resident of this country for over thirty years, still retains the accent of the Yorkshireman. He has the typical broad "a's" of the county of broad acres. He tells a story which is particularly appropriate at this juncture when Dreadnoughts and fleet units are the topics of the hour. The story has to do with a horse breeder in Yorkshire who, on one occasion, sold an animal to a certain colonel who was buying remounts for the British army. On his next visit to the town in question the dealer tried to sell another horse to the officer, but the latter remembered his man.

"By jove," said the colonel, "did you not sell me a horse last year, my good fellow?"

"I did, sir," replied the dealer. "Well, let me tell you, put in the officer, 'that the bally horse you sold me was 'good at all for the army.'"

"Well," replied the irrepressible dealer, "why didn't you try him in the navy?"

Thick and Thin.

Paul Emile Lamarche, who sits for Nicollet, in the Canadian House of Commons, and Captain Tom Wallace, of Woodbridge, are close personal friends, although Lamarche is the thinnest and Wallace is the fattest member in Parliament. During the navy debate, Captain Tom was sitting directly in front of the little French-Canadian while George Graham was making his fighting speech against the Government's proposals. Suddenly Lamarche tapped the captain on the shoulder, after attempting to peer around his bulky frame and whispered:

"Say, Tom, do you mind sitting sideways for a moment. I want to see who is sitting on the front Opposition benches."

BLEEDING A KING.

Louis XIV., a Grasping Doctor and an Ambitious Surgeon.

In 1683, when Louis XIV. began to feel the first touches of age, his physicians ordered him to be bled once a month. That duty was of course entrusted to Marechal, his Irish surgeon.

There was at the time in Paris, says the British Medical Journal, a young brother of the craft who conceived the idea of making his fortune by bleeding the king. The enterprise was difficult, but he knew that the most solid doors can often be opened with a golden key.

Following the advice of Iago, he put money in his purse and sought an introduction to Antoine Daquin, the king's chief physician. The negotiation was conducted on a strict business footing. Daquin, who was known to love money, was told that 10,000 crowns were deposited with a notary who had instructions to transfer the sum to him as soon as the surgeon had got the job.

It was not an easy thing to manage, as Marechal never left the king. One day, however, he asked permission to leave Versailles for three days. Daquin seized the opportunity to introduce his protégé, whom he had ready at hand for the purpose. Feeling the king's pulse one morning, as usual, he pretended to be alarmed at its strength and volume and ordered the illustrious patient to be bled forthwith. As Marechal was away, the king hesitated, but fear soon made him yield to his physician's proposal. The young surgeon bled the king, and Daquin got his money.

In the meantime message had been dispatched for Marechal, who was not far off. He returned to Versailles in haste and was much surprised to find that the king, whom he had left in the best of health, had been bled. He was not on friendly terms with Daquin, and he quickly grasped the situation. He went to see the young surgeon and forced him to disclose the whole plot.

When the king learned the truth, he flew into a terrible rage, ordered Daquin to be arrested and placed the matter in the hands of the council of state. That obsequious body, after a very short deliberation, unanimously voted that the physician who had trafficked in the blood of the king deserved death. The royal wrath, however, subsided to some extent, and he graciously spared Daquin's life, but deprived him of his office and exiled him from the court to Quimper-Corentin. The too greedy physician did not long survive his disgrace.—London Standard.

All the Vowels in One Word.

There are but six words in the English language which contain all the vowels in regular order, viz, abominous, areous, anous, anous, anous, anous, anous. There is but one word which contains them in regular reverse order, and that word is duolateral. Besides the above there are 149 English words which contain all the vowels in irregular order. Twelve of these begin with the letter a, seven with b, twenty-three with c, sixteen with d, fourteen with e, four with f, seven with g, one with h, six with i, two with j, two with k, two with l, two with m, two with n, two with o, thirteen with p, one with q, five with r, nine with s, two with t, fifteen with u and six with v.

A Curious Church.

The most singular church in the world is probably St. John's, at Darvo, Fife, in Scotland. Darvo is a small town of about 5,000 people and is famous as a winter resort for consumptives on account of its great purity of air and protection from high winds. St. John's Church is a very small building, but nevertheless it has two steeples. One of these is much larger than the other, towering high above the church and presenting a most singular appearance, being twisted after the manner of a corker. The steeples contain some fine chimes, which in ancient times were used to sound the alarm when there was a threatened invasion of wild animals.

Not in His Line.

"I presume, my good fellow, you're a laborer?" said a lawyer to a plainly dressed witness. "You are right—I'm a workman, sir," replied the witness, who was a civil engineer. "Familiar with the use of the pick, shovel and spade, I presume?" "To some extent. Those are not the principal instruments of my trade, though." "Perhaps you will condescend to enlighten me as to your principal implements?" "It is scarcely worth while. You don't understand their nature or use." "Probably not, but I insist on knowing what they are." "Brains."

A Murder Tip.

"Excuse me," said the detective as he presented himself at the door of the music academy, "but I hope you'll give me what information you have and not make any fuss."

"What do you mean," was the indignant inquiry.

"Why, that little affair, you know."

"I don't understand."

"Why, you see, we got a tip from the house next door that somebody here was murdering Richard Strauss, and the chief sent me down to work up the case."—London Mail.

The Drawback.

Mlle. Victorine confides to the janitor's wife that her mistress, who is old and feeble, has promised to remember her in her will if she takes good care of her till she dies. The janitor's wife shrugs her shoulders.

"The worst of that is, my dear, that the better you take care of her the longer she'll have to wait for your legacy."

A Royal Trousseau.

The most expensive trousseau on record is that of the late Empress of China. The trousseau cost over $1,000,000.

Healthful Work.
