OUR LIVE STOCK TRADE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The value of living animals imported into Great Britain for food during the six months ending June 30 was £4,616,979 compared with £4,924,619 in the corresponding period last year. There were 230,373 cattle, against 254, 685; of that number 158,895, against 162,300, came from the United States; 38,562, against 62,152 from the Argentine Republic; and 31,893, against 29,-468 from Canada. Of sheep, the number was 262,536, against 405,801 last year. The United States sent 76,950, against 102,705; the Argentine Repub-Hc, 178,969, against 278,506; and Canada, 5,549, against 9,428. Of course, in the month of June, the Argentine Re-, public sent no live stock, and the figures given indicate the falling off in the general supply from this cause. The number of horses imported during the six months was 29,168, against 22,386 last year. The United States sent 19,951, against 15,467; Canada, 1,219, against 1,155; and other countries 7,998, against 5,764. The value of the horses imported was £793,356, against £629,180 for the same period last year.

SPIRITUALISM.

Rev. Dr. Austin, in his address here. simply reiterated the old arguments in favor of spiritualism. And these very arguments are calculated to make any sensible person weary! Just imagine, if you can, anybody seriously believing that the Almighty indulges in the fake picture business in a darkened room or has created in his wisdom a natural law by which spirits are permitted to talk to their mortal friends provided they use tin trumpets. There are, we believe, two kinds of spiritualists, those who are in the thing for money and those who imagine they "see things," hear voices, etc. The latter are no doubt sincere. This she has a right to enjoy. To permit class we sympathize with. The former are sharks and frauds who prey on their dupes. These frauds are not expert enough to go on the stage as professional sleight-of-hand men or conjurers, and they resort to this cheap and easy method of deceiving a few impoents, out of whom they make a living without working for it. Dr. Austin refers to this Medium Coleman, of Detroit, whose simple tricks tation or right of privacy against cirappear to have thoroughly taken him in. There is nothing Coleman did for him a professional sleight-of-hand performer cannot duplicate and excel. If her lithograph likeness, owing to But all this has been explained thousands and thousands of times, and still these sharks find dupes. If Dr. Austin really wants the truth let him go has faith in put up the necessary cash for the inside working of the fake and he can buy it. When he finds out how the tricks are performed he will be amazed at their simplicity.

A HANDSOME PERSON'S PICTURE HAS A PROPERTY VALUE.

Justice Davy, of the Supreme Court has overruled the demurrer to the complaint of Abigail Robertson, the eighteen-year-old girl, who brought suit lagainst the Franklin Mills Company, for $15,000 damages, Miss Robertson, who is a very beautiful girl, found that, unknown to herself, her portrait was being used by the defendant companies as an advertisement for "Flour of the Family." Her chief ground of suit was that her right of privacy had been invaded, a point never before passed upon in the courts of this country. In his decision Justice Davy says: . .

"It does not appear from the com plaint in this action that the plaintiff is within the category of what might be denominated a public character. She is undoubtedly a young woman of rare beauty, and this she enjoys as a private citizen. It is very natural, if the plaintiff is of a modest and retaring nature, that any such publicity would be extremely disagreeable and offensive to her. It is not impossible, therefore, that she has suffered and continues to suffer great mental injury and distress. In other words, there is a plausible ground for the existence of the distress and injury alleged in her complaint. It cannot be said that it is a pure fabrication or fancy. The act is such that every person can readily see might cause, and probably did cause, mental distress and injury to her nervous system.

"Take any modest-and refined young woman, possessed of more than ordinary beauty and intelligence, situate in like circumstances as the plaintiff, and she might naturally be extremely shocked and wounded in seeing a lithographic likeness of herself posted in public places as an advertisement of some enterprising business firm. To permit every person to use a lithographic likeness of the plaintiff to advertise their business, and yet say there is no power in the courts to prevent it, would be asserting a proposisition at war with the principles of justice and equity and in violation of the sacred right of privacy. Every personal interest which she possesse must be regarded as private, especially when the public has acquired no right

It mplies an improved and progressive condition of the people in cultivated manners and customed, with well-defined and respected domestic relations. The privacy of the home in every civilized country is regarded as sacred, and when it is invaded it tends to destroy domestic and individual happiness. It seems to me, therefore, that the extension and development of the law so as to protect the right of privacy should keep abreast with the advancement of civilization. When private life is invaded, which brings pain and distress of mind and destroys the pleasure and happiness of domestic life, the courts ought to have power to protect the individual from such an

"For years there has existed in the public mind a feeling that the law was too lax in affording some remedy for the unauthorized circulation of portraits of private persons, and this invasion of privacy has been keenly felt by the public. It may be asked how the circulation of these lithographic advertisements affect the plaintiff in her rights of privacy. It is evident that the acts of the defendants in printing and posting her likeness in public places as an advertisement to sell their flour invites public criticism and brings her name into more or less unenviable notoriety, and to a certain extent inflicts injury upon her reputation and feeling, especially if she desires a life of privacy, which every person to print and use the like ness of the plaintiff to advertise their business and yet say there is no power, in the courts to protect her, would be asserting a proposition at war with the principles of, justice and equity. Are we to rely upon the courts for the protection of one's goods and chattels; and is there no power to protect the plaintiff's repuculating and posting these lithographs in public places, unless it be by the horsewhip or some other unlawful acti its beauty, is of great value as a trade mark or an advertising medium, it is a property right which belongs to her and cannot be taken from her without say that, without her consent, these lithographic copies of her likeness shall not be circulated or used by the

LITERARY NOTES.

UNLEAVENED BREAD.

Served after a course of historical novels and war records, "Unleavened Bread" is a refreshing dessert. It is an immensely clever caricature of social life, and refrects a keenly observant mind, It will be thor-oughly relished by all who have looked into society and its ways, and who know that therein all is not gold that glitters.

Robert Grant has cleverly presented his characters. In this gallery hang no impos-ing portraits suggesting weeks of patient toil with the brush, but there we find "snap-shots" of women and of men, who have had neither the time nor the warning to admit of posing For instance: "It was enough for him to watch her as she stood there with her head on one side, and the worried archangel look transfiguring her profile This is Selma White, about whom the whole story circles—Selma White, thrice married eventually, and bearing other names; who, throughout the three-act com-edy of her little life, paraded before the footlights, taking herself tragically, deliciously unconscious of the burlesque enjoy-ed by that quiet multitude of refined eyes in the shadowy theatre, and hearing not the

in the shadowy theatre, and hearing not the ridicule of "the gods."

Of comely appearance, coupled with an earnest manner, this worried archangel received the heart's best devotion of three consecutive men; and this commodity she made capital to purchase her own advancement. The adoration of the first was crystallized in a fine new house and "metal stag"-in the city of Benham-which the adorer had been enabled to buy through success in the varnish business. For a time Seima was happy in this new sphere; especially since she could forsake school teaching and become mistress of a gaudy house, when Lewis Babcock took her for better or for worse. But discontentment began to see the in her soul, when she found that family tify her in seeking a devorce, which she had little difficulty in obtaining. Without much delay, she again tried Without much delay, she again tried matrimony, this time with Wilbur Littleton, a New York architect, brainy and accordingly more congenial; for Selma was intensely ambitious intellectually, and had a great idea of her own mental capacity. She was equally ambitious for social success, though she spent a life-time trying to stifle and conceal this longing, realizing that she was not quite socially alizing that she was not quite socially fit. In cold-blooded fashion, she used every one in her path as means to an end. Wilbur Littleton was ready to do much for her, but alas, he pro-gressed too slowly in his profession, gressed too slowly in his profession, and was unwilling to sacrifice the high ideals of his art hy building architural "hotch-potches" and thus make money more readily, that his wife might keep pace with Mrs. Gregory Williams, the one woman who filled Selma with a fierce envy. Therefore Selma ignobly charged her husband with neglect of his duty to her, and the oft-repeated accusation in time broke his spirit. To save complications and to give this small-souled woman every chance to attain the man every chance to attain the heights, the author allowed Littleton to die, and great is the pity, for he was the fine character of the story. His death left Selma free to marry the lawyer who obtained her release from bondage as Mrs. Babcock.

As Mrs. James O. Lyons, the wife of a successful politician with a senatorship as goal, Selma believed she could go no higher. She was ecstatic on the night of her hasband's election when the crowd gathered about his house to cry out their congratulations. Toge-ther they stood upon the balcony, and as Selma listened to his peroration "she felt that he was speaking for them both and that he was expressing the yearning intention of her soul to attempt and perform great things.
