"IT IS NOBLE TO FORGIVE."

Lenchen and Gretchen lived quite quite near to each other in the valley of the Catskill Mountains. They were the best of friends, often visited each other, and whenever they could they went walking together in the fields and woods. On one of these walks they found a little flower such as they had never before seen, it being striped red and blue. They began to contend about the color of the blossom; Lenchen said it was red, but Gretchen said it was blue. At first they were not angry at all, and talked in fun, but soon they talked in earnest and quarreled. From at an end. They did not visit each other any more, and when they chanced to meet they passed each other without greeting. But both of these little girls were very unhappy indeed. One evening—it was the evening be-fore Gretchen's birthday—Lenchen seemed to be bothering her little head about something. Always before she had enjoyed a good time on Gretchen's birthday. As she thought about this, how pleasant it always had been, she could no longer keep back her tears. She ran to her mother, sobbing aloud, and buried her face in mother's lap, who very well knew what troubled her little girl. She brought a book in which were a great many beautiful stories and sayings, and gave it to Lenchen to win her from her griet. Lenchen took the book and began to read and to try to forget her trouble. She had not read very long when her eye rested on this beautiful sentence: "It is noble to forgive." Then her litheart grew sad as she thought of her playmate, and she wished that she and Gretchen could be friends again, and to-morrow, Gretchen's birthday, would be just the time to show her that love and friendship are better than anger and quarreling. To think of being friends again made her glad and happy, and long after she had gone to ed, she could not sleep for joy, her leart was so full of happy thoughts. Early next morning she arose at the break of day, plucked the prettiest flowers in the garden and made of them a beautiful bouquet. Then she wrote a loving little note of good wishes, and lown in one corner she added: "Dear Gretchen, and the tiny flower I think is blue and red." She placed the letter among the flowers and then went to Gretchen's house. How joyously the fittle birds sang upon the way! How lovely the perfume of the flowers, and how happily she greeted the first rays of the morning sun! Everything about her was beautiful because of the sunshine in her heart.

Quietly she tiptoed to the window of the little bedchamber in which Gretchen slept, laid the bunch of flowers on the window ledge, and then ran as fast as her little feet would carry her back When Gretchen arose she went, as she always did the very first thing in the morning, to the window to water her plants. How happily she was surprised when she saw the bouquet. She glanced at the letter and her heart eaped for joy. Over and over again she said to herself, "Yes, the flower is red and blue; the flower is indeed red she brought the whole house in an uproar, and without stopping to explain to father and mother the cause of her strange conduct she ran, nay, she flew fast through the woods to her friend Lenchen, who waited for her at the corner of the house. The letter had told it all, so the two children clasped each other around the neck and sealed their friendship anew amid tears of their friendship anew annu tears of goy with many kisses.

Often older people become estranged from each other, just as did Gretchen and Lenchen, through triffee; and how many a heartache would be spared if they were as ready and willing to forgive as were these children.—Trans-lated from the German, by S. J. M.

The children of the house and Jocko are boon companions, and of a warm afternoon enjoy a trolic together upon the lawn. One day some one threw a match down and the grass ignited, making a little blaze.

Jocko saw it and stopped and looked, then glanced all around, and, seeing a piece of plank not far off, ran for it, crept cautiously to the fire, all the time holding the plank as a shield between himself and the flame, then threw the plank on the fire and pressed it down and extinguished it. What child could have come from the fire, still no one knows what the result might have been; and the monkey evidently believ-ed that prudence is the better part of

The Work of Sparrows. The town clerk in Sarnia, Ontario, copped one morning not long ago, ind, on investigation, the hands were found securely tied down by strands of twine and grass. The mischief had been done by a pair of sparrows. De-siring to build a nest in the angle of the hands, the movement of which in-terfered with their plans, they tied the hands to each other, and to the framework, in such a manner that it took considerable time and labor to remove the obstructions. The engineering skill displayed, and the amount of industry and perseverance exhibited, makes the feat quite phenomenal in bird annals.

The popular view of the relation of he blood to human character and conduct is marked in many a familiar expression. We speak of their be-ing "bad blood" between people at enmity, of "blue blood" as indicating ancestry, of "black blood" as describing a treacherous nature, and in many another phrase mark our belief that in the mental, moral and physi-cal man, "the blood is the life." The one basis of a healthful, happy and useful life is pure blood. With the blood pure, disease has no permanent lodging place in the system. For this reason the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery rids the body of diseases which have their origin mpurity of blood. It absolutely purifies the blood, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter, increasing the action of the blood making glands, and building up the body by supply-ing the blood in quantity and quality such as is essential to a condition health. A Strange Thing. "here was one word the little gir heard many times a day and could not imagine what it was. The word was Mussentouchit. Baby wondered who Mussentouchit could be. The strange thing lived in the bureau drawers; it lived in the sewing machine; it lived in the tall far that stood on the little round table; it certainly lived in the glass globe where the gold fishes swam.

This went on till baby was two year old. Mussentouchit was everywherein the shining books on the parlor ta ble; in the flower beds; among the roses; even in mamma's work-baske the strange thing lived; and if boby took up a reel of silk or cotton, there

One day baby found lierself by the glass globe all alone. The family were very busy, and for a few minutes forgot the little, prying, restless darling. This was her chance. Up went the chubby legs into the chair that stood near the gold-fish globe. Poised on the rounding cushion, baby reached far over to touch the gold-fish. In reaching she lost her balance and fell, dragging the globe to the floor. There was a crash, a scream, a rush, and mamma was on the spot. Baby was picked up, kissed and scolded.

"I dess I tilled old Mussentouchit 'is time!" she said, shaking herself and walking off. **

How to Save Money. For one thing we must resolutely resolve that we will not spend money in trifles. "Trifles make up the sum of human life;" they certainly add very considerably to the sum of household expense. Yet the peculiarity about them is that the people who most indulge in them are the most unconscious of the fact. "Avoid spending money in trifles, of course," says the embarrassed householder, "that is what every one says; yet why repeat the advers to many trifles. the advice to me? I never buy trifles; I have something else to do with my money." Yet more likely than not the very next time this individual goes to market a small purchase will be made which benefits no one, and which runs away with one of those pennies that must be put together before the pounds can be saved. It is a characteristic of unthrifty people that they readily yield to the temptation to buy trifles. The unthrifty, the unmethodical and the weak let money dribble between their fingers; the capable, managing, economical persons do not part with money unless they get money's worth in exchange. A Snake in a Base Ball Game. Two Pond Eddy (N. Y.) clubs were playing a game of baseball recently, batter struck a ball over into left field, and the fielder ran to get it. The ball rolled along through the grass, and when the player who was after it got to where he had seen it stop, he was almost paralyzed to see lying there, instead f the ball, a big rattlesnake, coiled to strike. The player jumped back in time to escape the fangs of the snake, for it struck sav-agely at him. The player smashed the snake's head with a stone. The ball lay in the snake's coils. It is supposed that the snake was lying asleep in the grass, when the ball rolled along and ran against him. The repti's had instantiy coiled around the object and prepared for suspected danger. A Cold Wave. A cold wave, as defined by Pror. T. Russell, is a fall of temperature in twenty-four hours of 20 degrees over an area of 50,000 square miles, the temperature in some parts of this area descending to 36 degrees. Between 1880 and 1890 no less than 691 cold waves were recorded in the United United States.

United States. But a Momentary Triumph. stevenge is a momentary triumph, which the satisfaction dies at once, and is succeeded by remorae; whereas forgiveness, which is the noblest of all revenges, entails a perpetual pleasure.
