He got into an angry dispute with Mills in its struggle for o stitution il liberty of Bothwell, over the Parnell letter published in the London Times, and Mills suggested amendments to Curran's resolution, particularly that relating to defining d aw his rejections on Wallace.

r sumed the discussion of the Irish resolution in an argumentative and impressive speech, tracing the analogy between the condition of Canada when a crown colony and the condition of Ireland to-day. His argument was that there were two ways of governing people, by despotism or coercion, or by free institutions. The first method applied to inferier races; the lafter alone could operate among high spirited people. All operate among high spirited people. All arguments against the home rule bill had long ago len used against responsible stated that a number of members could long ago le'n used against responsible government in Canada. When recommended by Lord Durham at that time, Lord John Russell, the most liberal statesman of his day, saw great danger in the proposition, the same danger, in fact, which many see in granting home rule to Ireland. It was true that there were demagogues, but agitators of this class were only dangerous when the privilege of self-government was denied. Paninean of Monday. of self-government was denied. Papineau, before constitutional liberty was given to Cauada, was the idol of his country. After that privilege was granted he sought to raise a new agitation, but he who a few years before might have recalled the whole provings to his standard was not constructed in San Luke and a challenge of self-government.

TO LANDERKIN of South Grey, who followed Laurier's good tempered speech belongs the credit for introducing party politics into the discussion. He assailed the ministerial party, and the ministers themselves, particularly Costigan and Thompson, declaring that the Tories were favored by all the enemies of Ireland. His speech seemed to be a studied attempt to provoke the supporters of the government into opposition to Curran's resolution.

BROOKLYN, April 24 —Miss Annie C. Leslie, a Philadelphia belle, accidentally and fatally shot herself in the right temple yesterday afternoon with a revolver. She died at 4 p. m. She had arrived Friday evening to visit a school friend. She was well versed in handling a weapon and was a crack shot. She is supposed to have been emptying and cleaning the pistol when the accident occurred.

BLAKE and that it would be better to use the language of hope than of protest. He thought it would be better not to define the character of home rule desired, by asking that the measure be similar to that of Canada. The best thing would be to have the matter expressed in general terms. He would not, however, move an annendment, but would suggest that Curran might so amend the resolution. Blake discussed in detail the provisions of the crimes bill, condemning in general the principle and detail of the measure. Then explaining the condition of the Irish tenantry and quoting General Buller, he made extensive criticism of the speeches against Curran's resolution. He speeches against Curran's resolution. He could not agree that this house was insufficiently informed on the case to pronounce an opinion, but was willing to concede that the speakers who made that argument proved it true in their case. Blake spoke for 14 hours, closing at recess with an eloquent peroration, in which he declared that the long delay of justice to Ireland might make separation an issue, while it would certainly render the concession less valuable for the purpose it was demanded—to restore the friendly feeling and strengthen the bond of unity between the different sections of the British empire. In the course of his speech he protested against the violent language of O'Brien and Muskoka and asserted that if editor O'Brien came to this country on a campaign against one year. country on a campaign against one par-ticular landlord, liberty would be allow-ed him to say what he liked without police surveillance or police protection.

HON. COSTIGAN resumed the discussion after recess. He made a moderate presentation of the case, paying a warm t ibute to Mr. Gladstone paying a warm t ibute to Mr. Gladstone and charging the home rule measure, and preventing the only possible solut on of the question. He quoted extensively from opinions of judges in Ireland of contrary tenor to those quoted yesterday by McNeil. The authorities quoted by Costigan went to show that the Irish people were not disposed to crime. With all of gies to the house he would make brief reference to the charge made against him by Landerkin, namely that he had destroyed the Blake resolutions of last year. He would cite a better friend of Ireland than any gentleman opposite—
