MY PLACE IN THE WORLD.

Whoever I am, wherever my lot,
Contentment and duty shall hallow the spot.
That Providence orders for me;
No covetous straining and striving to gain.

One fervent step in advance—
I know my own place, and you tempt me in vain
To hazard a change and a chance.

I care for no riches that are not my right,
No honor that is not my due;
But stand in my station by day and by night.

The will of my Master to do;
He lent me my lot, be it humble or high,
And set me my business here.

And whether I live in His service or die,
My heart shall be found in my sphere.

If wealthy I stand as the steward of my King,
If poor, as the friend of my Lord,
If feeble, my prayers and my praises I bring.

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

If I stand, my pen or my sword;
If I stand, my pen or my sword;

condition that after he had restored peace, he should be permitted to retire. Having succeeded and returned to his former See of Connor, which he divided, and taking down for his charge, placed the remainder under another bishop.

It was then that Malachy determined to go to Rome to submit his case to the Holy Father, and to obtain a pallium for the primate. He seems to have first crossed over to Scotland, whence he moved southward to York. There a priest named Sychar, who had the gift of prophecy, recognized him as the Holy Irish Pontiff who knew the hearts of men. There he was welcomed, and he remained for some time, and he remained for some time, and he remained for some time.

For duty's bright living glories all,
With brotherhood, equal and free,
Obedience, as children, the heavenly call,
That places us where we should be;
A servant—the badge of his servitude shines.

As a jewel invested in heaven;
A monarch, remember that justice assigns
Much service where so much is given.

Away, then, with "helping"—humble and harm
Though "bettering" trips from your tongue;
Away for your folly would scatter the charm.

And all that your wisdom would counsel me most
Is—Leave it, do better elsewhere.
If "better" were better indeed and not "worse."

I might go ahead with the rest;
But many a gain and a joy is a curse,
And many a grief for the best;
Not duties are all the "advantage" I use.

I pine not for "situation" or pelf,
And as to ambition, I care not to choose
My better or worse for myself.

I will not, I do not, I cannot—I stand
Where God has ordained me to be,
An honest mechanic—or lord in the land—
He fitted my calling for me;

Whatever my state—be it weak, be it strong,
With honor or sweat on my face,
This, this is my glory, my strength and my song,
I stand, like a star in my place.

St. Malachy's Prophecy.
Attention has been called to the ancient prophecy attributed to St. Malachy, Archbishop of Armagh, and the friend of the illustrious St. Bernard, through a work lately published by the Cardinal Archbishop of Sydney. This prophecy is of peculiar interest, both from the circumstances under which it was delivered, and because the inspired prelate had passed away before the conquest of Ireland by Henry the second of England. At that time the condition of Ireland was very different from what it had been in those earlier ages when its learning and piety were known to all the world.

The consequences of these aggressions were most disastrous. Despotism, rapacity, luxury, and every kind of lawlessness took the place of the ancient institutions of the country, public morality had been succeeded by vice and obedience to the Church by defiance of authority. Unless this mournful change from Ireland's pristine rule and manners be borne in mind, the language with which St. Bernard begins the biography of his deceased friend will hardly be understood. "Our Malachy," he says, "was born and educated in Ireland, but he was not more effected by the rudest scenes of conflict and violence. His parents were of honorable rank and were reckoned among the great people of the land. The mild and thoughtful boy owed much to his mother, who was nobler by her virtues than by her blood. She taught her son a knowledge more precious than all the learning of the world, and his spirit being susceptible of such teaching, he chose the better path. After a period of probation to religious life, he was admitted to the order of the priesthood at an age earlier than ordinary. One of his chosen tasks was to visit the once glorious monastery of Benchor (the blessed choir or company, now called Bangor) which had been destroyed by the pirates. It was with this task, engaged that he was entrusted. Being reluctantly consecrated Bishop of Connor, he had the sorrow to see his city sacked by the King of Ulster. He retired to the monastery, with King Cormac's help, built a new monastery. Ceallach, or Celach, the primate, dying, Malachy was, by his desire, elected Archbishop of Armagh; but, two rivals appearing in succession, he accepted the high office only on

The Holy Father and the Sword-Fish.

We extract from our contemporary, the Unita Cattolica, the following description of the offering of a sword-fish to the Pope, as narrated in the Pala di Civita di Reggio, in Calabria, by the Capuchin Father Francesco Zagari, who had the honor of presenting it:

On my arrival in the Vatican, the Swiss Guards gave admittance to the swordfish. A porter of herculean strength bore the enormous weight on his shoulders, but was obliged more than once to rest on the bulwarks of the mermaid's staircase, and according to previous orders had then to introduce the gift into the Pope's ante-chamber. There I, after being courteously received by a chamberlain, arranged it and laid out on a marble table the fishing gear, viz., the pole, the nets and the arrow.

The fish, stretched on a white cloth, where it was supported by immense lemons and oranges, and covered with lemon and laurel leaves, was seen in all its majesty.

After a short delay a prelate appears with the announcement, "Here is the Pope." At the same instant the door creaks and Leo XIII. enters, hale, erect, and smiling. And I, who had heard from others that he was aged, wasted and transparent looking, felt a glad surprise at seeing him, the contrary, straight and comparatively robust looking. I thought that in the presence of him, before whom the Pope's holiness prostrate themselves, I should have been overcome, but nothing of the kind. The smile that curved his lips, the sympathetic glance of his eyes inspired me as if by magic with such filial sentiments that I felt as if I was in the presence not of the most august of sovereigns, or of the Supreme Pontiff, but of a loving father, a good and gentle pastor.

Seating himself upon an ordinary chair, the Holy Father signed to me right hand to draw near. I rose and prostrated myself at his feet.

"Holy Father," I said, "good Father, since St. Joseph has done me the grace to lead me to your feet, permit me for the glory of our immaculate Lady, to read you this address."

"Go on, read it," I read the address.

"And where were you ill?" asked the Holy Father, having gathered from my address that I had a serious illness many years ago.

"At Chambery," I replied, "where in the palace of the Marchese Costa, the evil seed of the revolution was sown."

"I know, I know, and Vitellio's words, where are they?"

Here I confessed I was carried away by my enthusiasm, and almost touched the swordfish with my right hand. The Pope and I were close together, began to declaim in a loud and sonorous voice the following epigram written for the occasion by Diego Vitellio, at the request of Mr. Portanova, metropolitan of the Calabria:

Mystica quum dederit quondam tibi reba Christus
Ecce, Placitor Maximo, tu xiphias,
En coloris, gymbas, Scyllas sub gurgite
Ante pedes venit promptior ille totus
Opusculi simul ire comes vel turmas
nautantium
Quotquot ferrugine detinet unda
Phari,
At xiphias noster, simul, vetus incolis
ponit,
Mollia det potius pabula Pontifici:
Hanc sit fructuque non ultima gloria
placet;
Sive tridentiferi gloris summa viri,
Sive igitur pharisei concha, thronique
valeat
Det sapientis xiphias pabula Pontifici!

The Holy Father took the Latin poem from me, and with great pleasure and in a steady voice, recited it with his venerable lips. I was encouraged to ask a favor for some of the spiritual wants of these countries, and the Holy Father promised to satisfy my request.

"Yes, we will do something for the Calabria," I told him, "I will give you this money?"

"And how long will this fish last?"

"Two days longer," I replied, "because it is quite fresh; it was caught yesterday, and it is still in the net, and it will be six feet high."

the Pope. Now I beg your blessing for all. Oh, if you knew, Holy Father, how those poor people hope for your blessing on the sea, because its yield is stunted by our sin; on the earth, which no longer gives its fruits, and on the vineyards destroyed by phylloxera."

"Blessings, blessings on all!" And there I was with the arrow, the nets and the short staff, prostrate on the ground, transported with love for the Pope, kissing his right foot, and quickly disappeared from my gaze what never will be recalled from my heart, the sight of that white, angelic figure, which for a short hour gave me a sense of superterrestrial delight.

The Monsignor who supplied me with the money took from my hands all the fishing apparatus, relieving me of them out of charity.

"Oh! if those who are hostile to the Pope would only once prostrate themselves at his feet with what altered feelings they would leave his presence!"

Death of Sister Irene.
Sister Mary Irene Fitz-Gibbon, founder of the New York Foundling Hospital and of Seton Hospital, at Spuyten Duyvil, N. Y., died on Friday morning 22nd ult., of heart disease at the Foundling Hospital, 65th street and Third Avenue. Sister Irene, as she was known, had been ill a month, and had been an invalid for more than a year, but her death was unexpected. No sister of the order of Charity in this country had gained so wide a reputation for the success of her charitable undertakings. The Foundling Hospital, the raising of funds for which was entirely due to Sister Irene's efforts, recently admitted to its wards the twenty-eight thousand child since its establishment by Sister Irene, October 11, 1869. Sister Irene was born in Kensington, London, May 12, 1823, and came to America with her parents when 9 years of age. In the cholera epidemic of 1849 she was living in Brooklyn, and was stricken with the plague. She made a vow that if she should recover she would devote her life to religious work. As soon as she had recovered her health she entered the Community of the Sisters of Charity, at Mount St. Vincent, Jan. 15, 1850, and she was sent as a novice to St. Peter's School in 1851. In 1855 she became Sister Superior of St. Peter's School, which office she held until her establishment of the Foundling Hospital. She industriously raised the funds for the founding of Seton Hospital, which was opened two years ago at Spuyten Duyvil. Sister Irene has no living relatives nearer than Naples and Naples—Stamato and Times.

It is reported in Canada that the P. A. A. Canadian A. P. A. is on the point of disruption owing to a want of harmony between an ex-Grand President and the present Executive. The Toronto office of Mr. Alex. Kerr, Grand Secretary has been closed, but a representative of the P. A. A. Grand Secretary on being interviewed, stated that the closing is due to the fact that Mr. Kerr has undertaken the management of a weekly paper at Naperville, and not on account of intestine troubles; nevertheless, he acknowledged that there is friction between Mr. Kerr and the ex-Grand President, and that the P. A. A. would be a benefit to the people of Canada if the fraternal organization were to go out of business. It is singular that the Canadian P. A. A. and our own A. P. A. have both started on the down grade at the same time. When they are gone and forgotten the Catholic Church will be even stronger than it is today in Canada and the United States.—Catholic Review.

The Cathedral of New York has been presented with a holy water bottle, the most magnificent in the country, and the generous donor will not permit his name to be made public. It will cost about $6,000 and will be one of the finest Carrara marble, the architect having gone to Italy to select the stone himself. The font will be located in the first alcove to the right within the south-west entrance, and will be six feet high.

Emilio Zola's novel "Rome," the inaccuracies of which have caused great comment at Rome, has been placed upon the Index Expurgatorius.

A LIFE SAVED
BY TAKING
AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

"Several years ago, I caught a severe cold, attended with a terrible cough that allowed me no rest, either day or night. The doctors, after working over me to the best of their ability, pronounced my case hopeless, and they could do no more for me. A friend, learning of my trouble, sent me a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which I began to take, and very soon I was greatly relieved. By the time I had used the whole bottle, I completely recovered. I have since had much of a cough since that time, but I firmly believe that it was the Ayer's Cherry Pectoral that saved my life. I am now well and happy, and I am very grateful to the author and head of the revolution."

"I am very happy, Holy Father, that this fish has given me the occasion to present the devotion and love of the Pope. God in heaven (I said) and the Pope on earth."

"Yes, Holy Father, I should be happy and blest to be a martyr for the Pope."
