father's death. I know the heart I am trusting. I am confident of the love that is mine. But there was no thought of marriage until Bessie treated him with so much neglect and inkindness She forgot that all came from his hand, and scarcely permitted nim an opinion in his own house. 'We shall alter that.'-

'I have frequently noticed lately how little respect she gave him. It was not right."

'It was unjust. And, above all qualities, justice is the grandest. Let love go, but let us have justice. Mr. Madison is at the head of a great business. He ought to be the head of his own house. When I am his wife, I intend to see him in that place.

Bessie will never consent.' 'Bessie is not bad. Put Bessie in the right position, and she will be very good. For we may say what we like, Amber, it is not so much changing ourselves as changing our circumstances which makes us better.

'I think Bessie ought to have her own house.
