RUTH CAMERON

As I have said more than once in this column, the man or woman when he can't afford to buy anything, will come out frankly and say so, instead of making some elaborate (and obvious) excuse, as well as a low priced cut of meat nowadays.

And yet I have just been reminded that there is a certain type of person who, under certain circumstances, sings the saga of poverty too much instead of too little.

Impressing People With One's Poverty. I refer to the person who makes just as great an effort to impress people who are working for him or whom he is bargaining with, with his poverty, as he does to impress everyone else with his affluence.

For instance, I was luncheon with a group of women at a rather expensive hotel. Suddenly one of them gave an exclamation evidently of distress. "There's my dentist over there," she cried. "I hope he does not see me."

"Why not?" someone asked in surprise. "Because he'll think I have all sorts of money, my dear," she explained, "and I don't want him to. I've been telling him how bad George's business is this year, because I don't want him to make his bill too big."

But George's Business Wasn't Bad. Now, as I happen to know, George's business is not at all bad. But my lady wanted money for other things.

Again, a friend of mine took a young relative to board, one winter, while the latter was studying. The girl told how very poor she was and my friend, being one of those people too generous for their own good, made her a price that scarcely covered the cost of food (to say nothing of the cost of preparing it and the room rent).

Yet She Could Buy Silk Stockings. The girl accepted the price, indeed she gave her cousin to understand

A signal from the vindictive warned the storming parties to return, which they did amidst a hot fire. The vessels then backed away, but could not escape the storm of shell-fire, and the Dafoell took fire. As there was a danger of the ammunition exploding, a volunteer was called for to go below and hand it up. Devil responded, and accomplished his dangerous task. Eventually the Dafoell was taken in tow by a destroyer, and proud, though battered, she safely reached harbor.

is a super-heated day on which I write these verses; and people, as they go their way, are breathing heart-wrung curses. Excessive heat like this destroys the temper of the mildest; he loses all his sanity, and uses words the wildest. Fired Father, as his laughter rings like Easter chimes, he's prodigal with money. But he is sore and surly now, since heat began to sweat him; the sweat is dripping from his brow and prickly heat has got him. When mother says, "I need a broom," in accents mild and quiet, he turns upon her eyes of gloom, and starts a full-blown riot. The children tip-toe everywhere, no hint of racket making; for Father's like a grizzly bear whose head is sore and aching. He sits beneath the sunset tree and fans himself like blazes, and it is pitiful to see his line of smoking phrases. He rubs his back against the shed, its itching chafes and bothers, and says he wishes he were dead and planted with his fathers. He wishes winter would arise and come, with all its rigors; he reaches wildly for the flies, and burrows for the chiggers.

The Allies and the Holy See.

On Monday last the Prince of Wales visited the Pope at the Vatican. This act of deference towards the Head of the Roman Church, whose adherents number many millions among the peoples of the British Empire, was right and proper. The visit was obviously made with the consent and approval of the Italian Government. Our Rome correspondent reported that it gave "keen satisfaction to the Vatican and Catholic circles generally." On Thursday it was announced that, in pursuance of an appeal received through the Vatican from the Cardinal Archbishop of Cologne, the British Government had consented for "religious and humane" reasons that no British aircraft should be made during daylight that day, the Feast of Corpus Christi, on cities not in the vicinity of the battle-front. On the same day the German long-range guns bombarded Paris, as they did on Good Friday and Easter Sunday, struck a church, and killed or wounded eight persons. The simple narration of these facts reveals the abyss that divides the British and the German conceptions of what a Vatican organ recently called "respect toward religious convictions and the rights attached to them." It indicates also what the Allied nations are inevitably tending to feel in regard to the bearing of the Vatican towards these incompatible conceptions. The British people are grateful for the humane efforts of the Pope on behalf of their prisoners; they note also that the Vatican disclaims all part in and previous knowledge of the recent action of the Irish Catholic Episcopate; but they are uncertain whether the Vatican is not neutral towards the high moral and religious issues underlying the war, issues in regard to which they regard neutrality as inadmissible.

They feel that the war is essentially a contest between right and wrong, between organized devility and the principles of Christian civilization. Hitherto they have seen no unmistakable sign that the Holy See is unreservedly with the right and against the wrong. They have seen, to their regret, many signs in many countries that the Roman Catholic hierarchy has been with the wrong against the right. They now see that when, through the good offices of the Pope, their Government accedes "on religious and humane grounds" to the request of a German Prince of the Roman Church that British arms shall refrain from certain acts of war so as not to disturb the celebration of a great Roman Catholic solemnity by German Catholics, the German Government sanctions and commits acts of war against defenceless French Catholics on the occasion of that very solemnity. Therefore they await some clear condemnation by the Holy See of this latest German outrage and of the affront it implies to the Head of the Roman Church.—The Times.
