PANNING ONE'S FRIENDS.

A "Panner" is one who panned his friends. I mean I think they are malicious. I think they are just human. But I don't try. Having a lively imagination I can ever guess some of the things they say. That is, I could if I tried. I don't often try. For while I know that according to the law of human probability they say these things, I don't like to think about it and so I don't let my imagination run in that direction. And I must emphatically don't want anyone to tell me what someone else has said. Not unless it is some untrue statement which I ought to correct in justice to myself. For one can control one's thoughts better than one's feelings, and while I may forgive the friend because I know it is only human nature, it is awfully hard to forget it and to feel the same towards him or her. Don't you find it so?

What NEVER said this? I never, never, never says things behind her back that she would not say to their faces? I don't know. But she is an exceptional human being. Yes, more than that—an exceptional human being.

Fifth of world's Ship Tonnage is Lying Idle.

New York, Aug. 10.—Between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 gross tons of the world's shipping out of a total of 62,000,000 is now idle, or between 15 and 20 per cent., according to the latest information from official and semi-official sources. Of this idle tonnage the United States Shipping Board accounts for 4,625,000 gross tons, of which about a million is represented by wooden ships.

Although the American merchant marine has been harder hit than any of its competitors by the slump, British shipping has also been severely affected and whereas the American figures are stationary, or show slight improvement, British records show a continued falling off.

There were approximately 1,700,000 gross tons of vessels lying the Union Jack laid up in the ports of the United Kingdom. As compared with 1,100,000 tons of British shipping in foreign harbors, it is estimated that 1,900,000 tons of British shipping is eating its head off in idleness, or 10 per cent. of the total merchant marine of the Kingdom.

Adding to all the idle capital the cost of nucleus crews, rent for moorings, and increased rate of depreciation through idleness, the losses being incurred by the shipping industry attain tremendous totals. Yet the owners are saving money by not operating their ships in ballast, or with hold half filled at unremunerative freight rates.

Fashions and Fads.

A smart coat of black velvet has appliques and fringe of black leather on the skirt section.

Coats for fall feature the throw collar will meet with popularity.

It is predicted that novelty handbags will be carried—small pouch shapes of duvetyne and tapestry, mounted on filigree metal frames.

Little knitted coats of bright wool embroidered in flower designs are planned to wear over lingerie dresses. Velvet ribbons of genatium and tobacco brown are pasted together in alternating shades to form a smart toque.

Fur coats are being made on cape lines, and many of them have collar and cuffs made of the same pelt as the coat.

Bouffant models have had less popularity than usual recently. The straighter models are much more in demand.

Grope and lace are combined in many fashionable frocks. Black and navy are the predominant colors among the dresses.

Paris is using figured materials for negligees. Several new models have full, long capes, and show large jet ornaments at the girdle.

In cutting out dress patterns it is often difficult to find a piece of paper large enough, and one may not happen to have any paste at hand with which to join the pieces. In such an emergency if you have a piece of cold boiled potato, it will answer the purpose fully as well as paste. Rub the potato over the edges to be joined and press them firmly together.
