AMERICAN FARMERS THANKFUL

Senator Bristow, of Kansas, Progres-

"The farmers of the West, and the town people whose interests are tied up in a business way with the farmers, were very hostile to reciprocity. They believed that it was putting the farmer on the free trade basis and retaining the manufacturer upon the protective basis; that it was an unjust and indefensible discrimination against the farmers; and they deep-

Those who had not sold Ald. Richter says that in the part-maiden is equally dangerous, and so is are thankful to the Conservatives of nership between the city and hydro- the widow. It is dangerous for a man

Canada who saved them from their own President."

This fairly reflects opinion in the gricultural states. American grainrowers are confirmed in their gratitude to the Conservative party of Canada by observing the blockade in Western Canada. They know that but for the defeat of reciprocity millions of bushels of Canadian grain, now rotting on the ground, would have descended into the United States. The price of their wheat at the outset might have fallen a few cents, but not to the extent pictured by their exaggerated fears. Their vast and growing home market and the fact that Canadian exports at the best would be a United States, would have steadied prices after the first flurry. But no class of producers welcomes competition from any source, are angry at Taft for inviting it and thankful to those Canadians who protected them against it. They must were familiar with the "arguments" duce Canada from her British alleleaving the puddles about, from which economically as well as politically by good dose of the medicine they are so flooding the Canadian market with fond of giving you. "Educate them." Of things in backyards, and American farm products, are pleas that in the ears of the American farmers would sound like the inventions of a humorist or the delusions of a lunatic.

The Telegram differs from our local contemporary, which says that the proposal is out of place, because it drags a moral issue into politics.

Serious charges have been made against Hon. A. B. "Mr. Bob" by Amateurs. The London Conservatory Dramatic Club, under the direction of Miss Georgia M. Newbury, will present "Mr. Pob" at the Grand Opera House Tuesday evening, April 9. "Mr. Bob" is a breezy two-act comedy, full of comic situations, and is sure to create much enjoyment and laughter. All the parts are strong and exceptionally well contrasted. The yacht race scene, in the second act, is intensely exciting. A humorous sketch, "The Silent Sys tem," given by Miss Newbury and Mr Willgoose, will precede "Mr. Bob. This sketch is most mirth-provoking, and is certain to make a hit.
