Johnovitch and a number of his fellow-countrymen became involved in a fight in a hall off the barroom. The oprietor, P. J. McAvoy, who was upstairs, hearing the racket, rushed down and separated Johnovitch, and a man the police believe to be Ruski. As McAvoy separated the men Johnovitch ank to the floor. He was picked up by Mr. McAvoy and it was found that Dr. Wilson was summoned. The police motor ambulance conveyed he injured man to Victoria Hospital. Russians, in broken English, explained to the police that Johnovitch had recently acted as police court interpreter nd a witness in some cases, and that the stabbing was the outcome of a feud between the wounded man and ther members of "Little Russia. Under the heading "Are We Mismanaging the Militia?" John A. Cooper, and wounding John Johnovitch, who was editor of the Canadian Courier, takes up stabbed in the groin during a drunken a number of matters in the current issue of the magazine, among which are the questions of poor boots, lack of diseasepreventing facilities, and the quality of horses furnished by the remount com-missioner, Sir Adam Beck. The portion of the article referring to the horses purchased is as follows: Another rumbling relates to the purchase of horses. Horses for military purposes are mobilized the same as men. There is at Ottawa a plan, several years old, for mobilizing men and horses for overseas service. This plan lays down the general scheme whereby the men and the horses in each district are to be enlisted at regimental headquarters, collected at district headquarters, and finally mobilized at some point near embarkation. When war broke out, the militia counil threw that plan into the waste paper asket and started a new one of its own.
