-The famous association of underwriters and chipowners briefly known A SUCCESSFUL JERSEY BREEDER DETAILS THE as 'Lloyd's, celebrated a few weeks ago the fiftieth anniversary of the organization in its present form; and in commemoration of that event the commemoration of the comm issued to the members, a handsome Saddleback Farm, East Baldwin, this volume entitled Annals of Lloyd's Rewolume entitled Annals of Lloyd's Register (2) In this book the history of the society from its earliest beginnings is told, with sufficient, though by no means with wearisome detail. Few people who are not connected with snipping may be aware that the Lloyd who has given his name to the Register was a specific people. State, that nets an average of forty eight centre pround the year round. The cows are thoroughbred Jerseys, selected solely as individually large performers, without regard to color or form, except such points as one finds to be in common with large butter; the being common with large butter in a year—nothing else. Our barn is as warm, comfortable and clean as it can be made; the food, after much experiwho has given his name to the Register was himself neither underwriter, broken, shipowner, nor export merchant, but the keeper of a coffee house which became early in the last century a kind of exchange for these classes of commercial men. Subsequently, being a man of great enterprise and practical ability, he started a newspaper devotation of the shipping and other commercial of the shipping and other commercial and sweet, and does not soil. ed to shipping and other commercial intelligence, which in 1726 took the name of Lloyd List which it still retains. But with the establishment of the Register it does not appear that the Register it does not appear that the required to milk rejidulation of the Register it does not appear that the required to milk reputationally in silence; to strip dry, and to use the Register it does not appear that he had any direct connection. It is a classification of ships, which in its present form supplies all the information about them which can be useful to except the milking are taken to the dairy; there the milk is again strained into large cans, which at the close of the milking are taken to the dairy; there the milk is again strained porter or underwriter, and is, besides a kind of certificate of their condition, based on periodical survey, there the mink is again strained into deep setting cans and set in running spring water at an average temperature of 48 deg.; it is skimmed in thirty-six hours, and the cream placed veys made by the official surveyors to ripen in a warm place, it is sirred twice a day and its condition judged by of the Society. Of such universal authority is this certificate that a ship which is not 'classed at Lloyd's' has when lightly sour, thickened and not streky when lightly touched with the finger. which is not 'classed at Lloyd's' has very little chance of employment. The original Register was, of course, far less minute in its information, and less exact and authoritative in its classification, than its successor of the present day; and in this volume of 'Annals,' we learn how it has grown to its existing proportions. At first the society did not regularly employ any surveyor at all, and even so recently as the end of the last century they were few in number and very inadequately paid. At the time of the re-organization in 1834, the surveyors numbered 63, and 1834, the surveyors numbered 63, and sieve of small meshes, for more or less their operations were confined to the United Kingdom.
