ARCHBISHOP TACHE

(Continued from First Page.) THE BLECTION IS WHOLLY PROVIDENTIAL, and saves the mission of the west. The fields, of thy labors had been represented me under so distressing, so unfavorable a situation that after had any faith in the healing properties. I had resolved to call thee. This has been of their own medicines they would, like hon-I had resolved to call thee. This has been decreed by the Council when I heard of thy nomination to the spiscopacy. Obey the Pope, the Vicar of Jesus Christ, who entrusts thee with the destiny, with the salvation of a nation." What more could our young missionary say? Would he refuse to comply with the wishes of the Holy Pontiff, with the commands of his Superior-General to whom he had solemnly vowed obedience? He could not, he had to submit, he had to bow before that divine and immutuable Privi-dence, before that God whose commands must

The 13rd day of November, the day of his consensation, had arrived. The cathedral of Viviers was decorated in its richest ornaments. An immense crowd filled the vast edifice. The sonorous voices of the musicians, the sweet harmonies and melodious accords were filling the sacred temple. The cohoes of the belis were sounding far and wide, when Mgr. the Massanod, having sulogized the courage, hamility and Christian virtues of our missionary, had pronounced "Reverendissime pater postulat sancis mater ecclesia Catho dies, ut hune praesentem Presbyterum

Now a Bishop!

"If thou wishest to be perdect, sell what thou hast, and follow me." Had he not put this in practice? Had he not even followed his Saviour even to the remotest regions of the North? Had he not done more by sacrificing everything, choosing in return the humplest, the poores

THE APOSTLE OF THE WEST well understood the onerous duties of the prelacy. With so timorous a conscience, even with his myriad of virtues, he felt the With so timorous a conscience, necessity of spiritual help. His Lordship, after his long, wearled and tedious travels, had returned to St. Boniface. His health was in a critical situation; still, wonderful to say, his strength and courage for mission work had not diminished. A few months of rest had been considered neces sary; his superior had insisted upon his compliance with this necessity. But all in vain; for our saintly hero, more interested in the welfare of others, more affiloted over the miseries of his wild children, having more at heart the spiritual wants of his cherished flocks than the preservation of his own health, could not rest. Was he not aware that for the missionary and true missionary he still was, although a Bishop—there is no rest, that the delor and labor are his daily food, his only friends. Could be forget that the Holy Pontiff had entrusted him with the destiny, the salvation of a nation? Were not the Superior General's

The long-vexed question of the extreme limit of human life, as proved by authentic records, gives an interest to the view taken of the subject not by mere ourlous speculators, but by grave actuaries. Dr. Farr, in his tables of the expectation of human life at various ages, not only accepts 100 as a recorded age, but estimates the average en stion of life beyond that limit, as in the care of females about one year, une months and three and a bull days, and in the case of males at about one month less than that

A female smuggler named Bronar met with a serious accident at Lyons, the other day, while in the exercise of her illegal calling. She had concealed several bladders full of alcohol under her petticoats in order to pass them through the octroi free of duty. Being arrested on suspicion of smuggling, she pierced the bladders with a pin, and the of note is the advance reported by cable of liquor ran out before she reached the police station. On arriving there, however, she inoautiously attempted to dry her clothes before a red-hot stove. Being saturated with alcohol, they at once took fire. Mme. Bronar received such injuries that her life is in canger.

In iron and hardware there is not much change; a little ripple of excitement was caused by the tallure of Cotton, Connel & Co., of this city and Ginegow, but it soon subsided when the comparative small extent of their liability to Montrealers became known. SADLIER'S

FOR 1888.

We are compelled this year to advance the price of our Angual Directory and Almana to $1.50. In view of the facts for one, we are convinced, will deem the salvance uncalled For iwenty years we have issued the work at the price of $1.60, but from a volume of $30 pages in 1864, it has become in 1832 one of $56 pages, more than doubling the amount of matter.

The wonderful growth of Catholicity in this country, and wherever our language is spoken, the creation of new dioceses, erection of new churches and institutions, render the preparation of the work one of great magnitude.

Beports are obtained directly from all the Archishops and Bishops in the United States, the British Provinces, England, Ireland and Scotland. Sortland.

Nothing is reprinted from previous volumes or from the 1ri-h or English directories; the reports are all obtained especially for this work. Paper Cover, $1.50.
