found in many parts of America, but is very feldem to be feen. It is of a middle fize, and receives its name from a thorn like dart in its tail, with which it is faid to inflict a mertal wound.

The SPECKLED SNAKE is an aqueous reptile about two feet and an half in length, but without venomlts skin which is brown and white, with some spots of yellow in it, is used by the Americans as a cover for the handles of whips, and it renders them pleasing to the light.

The RING SNAKE is about twelve inches long; the body of it is entirely black, except a yellow ring which it has about its neck, and which appears like a narrow piece of riband ried round it. This odd reptile is frequently found in the bark of trees and among old

The TWO HEADED SNAKE. The only make of this kind that was ever feen in America, was found about the year 1762, near lake Champlain, by Mr. Park, a gentleman of New England, and made a prefent to lord Amberst. It was about a foot long, and in shape like the common make, but it was furnished, with two heads esastly similar, which united at the neck. Whether this was a distinct species of makes, and was able to propagate its likeness, or whether it was an accidental formation, I know not.

The TORTOISE or LAND TURTLE. The hape of this creature is so well known that it is unnecessary to describe it. There are seven or eight forts of them in America, some of which are beautifully variegated, even beyond description. The shells of many have spots of red, green, and yellow in them, and the chequer work, is composed of small squares curiously disposed. The most beautiful fort of these creatures are the smallest, and the bite of them is said to be veno mous.
