Women's Part in After War Work

The Marchioness of Aberdeen addressed a gathering of about 1,200 people in city yesterday. They were:—Frank city yesterday. They were:—Frank the Imperial Theatre yesterday afternoon, her subject being "Reconstruction After the War." Mrs. G. A. Kuhring presided and introduced the speaker. Lieutenant-Governor Wood and Mrs. Wood, General H. H. McLean, Mayor and Mrs. Hayes, Senator Thorne and leaders in patriotic societies of the city occupied boxes. A generous response was made to an appeal for funds for the Victorian Order of Nurses.

In her address the Marchioness of Aberdeen paid a high tribute to the work of women since the war began. She dealt with the causes of the war and terms upon which peace can be considered, saying that a settlement ensuring lasting peace is the only one possible. In order to conserve the resources of the empire and to enable it to meet the after-war demands, the speaker urged greater care of children that they might be brought up to be healthy and useful members of society and suggested work along this line for the women to engage in after the war. Medical inspection in the public schools, the appointment of school nurses, promotion of children's aid and playground work, care of feeble-minded, delinquents and defectives were all urged upon the attention of the women. The fact that some children's continued to the control of the women to the defence of the children's Aid Home here was suggested as an indication that more might be done to care for soldiers' families while the men are at the front.

In closing she suggested a conference of the women of the maritime provinces, and the leaves of the control of the women. The fact that some children is an indication that more might be done to care for soldiers' families while the men are at the front.

A FAKE NEW YEAR'S

Apathy Marks Slim Crowds That Gather for Cold-Storage

(New York Times.)
The experiment of holding a New Year's Eve celebration twenty-four hours after New Year's Eve because that chanced to fall on Sunday, failed to arouse enthusiasm in this city last with the company of the company o to arouse enthusiasm in this city last night. There was something resembling New Year's gayety in a few of the principal restaurants and hotels, where it had been announced that a belated celebration would be held, but the street crowds generally were apathetic, and in most of the street crowds generally were apathetic, and in most of the street crowds generally were apathetic.

would have to go back to work today, the restaurant managers could not say last night, but some of them appeared gloomy and asserted that with nominally three nights for New Year festivities instead of one, they feared that their receipts would not equal the returns of a "regular" New Year's Eve celebration. While the belated New Year's Eve celebration was disappointing to many, the regular New Year's day services in the churches on that day were better attended than usual. attended than usual.

The annual solemn mass of thanksgiving that was held yesterday in St.
Patrick's Cathedral was attended, it was estimated, by nearly 4,000 persons. It
