A CURIOUS SERMON.

By the Revd. M. Hyberdin, which he made at the request of certain thieves who robbed him on a hill, near Hartleyrow, in Hampshire, in their presence, and at that instant.

I Greatly marvel that any man should dispraise thieving, and think the doers thereof worthy of death, considering it is a thing nigh unto virtue, being used in all countries, the which thing I cannot compendiously shew unto you at so short a warning, and on so sharp an occasion. I must desire you, gentle audience [of thieves, to take in good part what at this time cometh into my mind, not doubting but that you, through your good knowledge, are able to add much more unto it than this which I shall now offer unto you.

Fartitude and stoutness of courage, and also boldness of mind, is comendable of some men to be a virtue; which being granted, who is there then that will not judge thieves to be virtuous? for they are of all men the most stout and hardy, and most void of fear; for thieving is a thing usual among all men; for not only you that are here at present, but also many others, in divers places, both men, women, and children, rich and poor, are daily of the faculty, as the hangman of Newgate can testify.

But most all I marvel that men can dispraise you thieves, whereas in many
