Sir Charles Ross a Visitor in the States—Project to Remove Remains of Methodist Pioneer to England

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company)

Sir Charles Ross, who has arrived in the United States from Europe with his Kentucky wife, has large interests both in the United States and also in Canada.

In addition to this he is, next to the Duke of Sutherland, the largest landowner in Scotland or even in the United Kingdom.

His principal county seat in Scotland is Balmowan Castle in the county bearing his name, a grand old place rising among woods close to the Crowsfoot Pier.

Sir Charles served with distinction in South Africa where he fitted out at his own expense, an entire battery for use during the Boer war.

He is a man of many talents, and has patented a number of very useful inventions, including military rifle which has been adopted by the Canadian government for its military forces and has displayed an amount of common sense and of intelligent enterprise which certainly do not come to him by inheritance.

His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather was so passionately fond of poultry that he insisted on having all the rooms in Balmowan Castle littered with straw, so that he might enjoy the pleasure of watching the chickens scratch and creep among them.

In his days there was not a room in the huge castle in which one was not apt to tread upon a setting hen or a new laid egg and one of the first things that his subversive was obliged to do on ascending to the property, was to floor and wainscot afresh every room in the castle.

One of Sir Charles' father it is told that one winter he became greatly irritated over the fact that he could find nothing for his army of workmen on one of his Scotch estates to do, owing to the frost and snow.

So at last he hit upon a plan. He gave out that he had lost a expensive snow where in the snow-covered grounds and set the men to find it. They searched and searched among the snow without success.

In the end, one of them, anxious to relieve himself and his fellow employees of so ridiculous a task even at the sacrifice of a piece of money, handed his master a sixpence and informed him that he had found the snow. The late Sir Charles instantly dismissed him for lying, explaining that he really had not lost any money at all.

With regard to the present baronet's education, it may be said that in all the history of Eton, extending over six centuries, there has never been a pupil there who enjoyed such a command of money and of luxury as Sir Charles.

He was educated at Eton, and while at school, by his ready hand he had a magnificent open-jawed steam yacht, a large sailing yacht, the most superbly appointed and biggest steam launch for river use on the Thames, a coach and four, and much else besides.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"WELL, I'd just like to know what Evelyn Berkeley has to be so stuck-up and exclusive about?"

"Well, I should say so. The other day she sat down beside me in the train by mistake, and when she looked up, saw me, and had to speak, she looked as grim as an oyster. And she hardly said a word all the way. She just makes me sick! What if her grandfather did write a few books! That's no reason for her to set herself up above everybody. And besides we all know how her mother was. I think that ought to humble her a little."

I heard that conversation about a week ago. Yesterday, strangely enough, I heard another conversation between the much censured Evelyn and a girl friend.

Said the girl friend, "Evelyn Berkeley, why didn't you talk more at the reception the other night? I watched you and you hardly said a word the whole evening. Do you think that's a nice way to act when you promised me you'd try to talk more?"

Said Evelyn, "Oh, dear, I knew you would be disgusted with me, Annie, and I did try, but you don't know how difficult it is for me to make small talk with people. I don't know very well. I'm always meeting people that I know slightly on the train going back and forth to work, and I feel I ought to talk to them, yet I can't think of a thing to say. And I just sit there stiff and stupid and hate myself. You have a natural social gift, Annie, and you don't know how hard it is to be born shy and self-conscious."

I wonder what the parties of the first conversation would have said if they could have heard the second. I have quoted the two at such length, because it seems to me that they expose with singular clearness one of the most common of all the misjudgments of our fellow creatures of which we are guilty—namely, the misinterpretation of diffidence and shyness as pride and exclusiveness.

Many a girl—and a man too, for that matter—who suffers torture in her efforts to overcome her inborn diffidence, is further punished for her misfortune by dislike and avoidance on the part of those who misinterpret her shyness and self-consciousness as snobbishness and disagreeable pride.

Now, I think almost everyone has different moods—moods when he suddenly finds himself out of tune with the universe and unable to enter into natural converse with those he ordinarily treasures and enjoys.

Surely you have had this experience. You knew people were thinking you different and disagreeable. You wanted to get back to your natural self and yet you were helpless. There you were marooned on a cold little island of self, ignoring how you came there, totally incapable of getting off or even of signaling your unhappy state to the mainland.

By and by the over-tired condition, the pre-occupation or the anxiety that cast you on that island, was relieved, and you found yourself once more on the pleasant mainland of happy, human intercourse.

Surely, then, you paused and thought a moment of the unfortunate people with whom the condition of shyness, diffidence and lack of harmony with the universe was the rule, and anything else the exception.

If you didn't you will next time, won't you? And thus turn your painful experience to good, by letting it teach you not to misinterpret shyness and diffidence as arrogance or unamiability.

Daily Hints For the Cook

CREAM PUFFS: Put four level tablespoons butter into one-half cup boiling water in a saucepan. Take one and a half level tablespoons cornstarch and add enough flour to make one-cup. When well mixed turn into the boiling water and stir until mixture leaves sides of saucepan. Remove from fire and cool by beating. Stir in, one at a time, two unbeaten eggs, beating the mixture thoroughly. Drop spoonfuls of the batter in baking pan and bake in a hot oven for thirty minutes. When entirely cold, split and fill.

INDIAN PUDDING: One cup sugar, one cup Indian meal, and a little salt, mixed well. Scald with one quart milk, in buttered dish, add half cup molasses, one egg well beaten, and stir well. Then add one cup cold milk, and do not stir. Bake in slow oven about three hours and add a cup of cold milk twice while baking. Pour it all over the top, and do not stir. This makes the bottom of the pudding like whey. Cover while baking.

DELMONICO STEAK: Nicely trim and lightly flatten with a cleaver two tender sirloin steaks of one and a quarter pounds each. Mix on a plate one teaspoon salt, half teaspoon white pepper with a tablespoon oil and gently roll the steaks in the seasoning; arrange on the broiler and broil on a brisk fire for eight minutes on each side. Remove and dress on a hot dish.

Afraid of Bright's Disease No Longer

Two years ago I was troubled with my kidneys and had terrible pains in my back. Oftentimes my back would hurt me so that I would be compelled to give up my work and sit down for a time to rest and ease myself. Knowing of the dreaded disease called "Bright's Disease," I began to think that it was creeping in to my system and I was fully decided to go to the doctor and let my case before him. But as my mother was using Swamp-Root at the time, she induced me to try some. The relief it gave me was very encouraging. My back became strong and in fact the use of two and one-half bottles of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root cleared my system of the kidney trouble entirely. I am a barber, and my feet all day long, but have no trouble with my kidneys. I have gained thirty pounds in weight since cured, and I feel as well as any very sufferer of kidney trouble. My remarkable cure by Swamp-Root.

You have my permission to use this letter in any form you see fit.

mous by Longfellow's well known poem, "The Luck of Eden Hall." The Rev. Silvester Home, who is heading the movement in England for the removal of the remains of George Whitefield, one of the founders of Methodism, from their burial place, under the pulpit of the Old South Church in New York City, Mass., and their conveyance across the Atlantic for re-interment in the Congressional Tabernacle in Tottenham Court Road, London, is one of the very few clergymen in the House of Commons, where he represents the old town of Ipswich.

Benevolent clergymen of the church of England, and of the Catholic church, and ministers of the Church of Scotland, are incapable of being elected to parliament, the old time disqualification being continued by an act passed at the beginning of the nineteenth century. The exclusion does not, however, extend to Nonconformist ministers.

The Rev. Silvester Home will probably meet with considerable opposition in his attempts to secure possession of the remains of George Whitefield. It may be recalled that four years ago a scheme on the same lines was inaugurated by the Congregationalists of Georgia with a view to the removal of the remains of Whitefield to their state on the ground of his early relations therewith. The demand was refused on the same grounds which will doubtless be put forward as an insuperable objection to the request of Mr. Home, namely that Whitefield was buried in the Old South Church in Newburyport, the finest country seats that catch the eye, belong to one or another of the Bolthies and each village library, each new church, and even every Wesleyan chapel in the duchy seems to have been given or endowed by the Bolthies. The old banking house of Bolthie, Williams & Co. is now amalgamated with the great London banking concern of Barclay & Co. which was for generations its representative in the metropolis.

Thomas Bedford Bolthie represents the St. Ives division of the Duchy of Cornwall as a Liberal Unionist in the House of Commons, and makes his principal home at Greenway, his country seat on the Dart, where Sir Walter Raleigh is on record as having enjoyed one of his many "first pipes," and was in more senses than one "put out" by a bucket of water, with which an overzealous servant drenched him, under the impression that he was on fire. Greenway was likewise the birthplace of Sir Walter Raleigh's half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, who discovered and took possession of England's oldest colony, Newfoundland, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

not only as the largest land-owners, but also as the most important mine owners, ship owners, tin exporters, bankers and all round philanthropists of Cornwall. If one wants a name to compare with in that westernmost county of England, it is that of Bolthie. The finest country seats that catch the eye, belong to one or another of the Bolthies and each village library, each new church, and even every Wesleyan chapel in the duchy seems to have been given or endowed by the Bolthies. The old banking house of Bolthie, Williams & Co. is now amalgamated with the great London banking concern of Barclay & Co. which was for generations its representative in the metropolis.

BEGGED NOT TO SEND BABY TO THE DEEP. Montreal, Nov. 22—Mrs. J. Tadena, a steamer passenger on board the S. S. Montrose, of the C. P. R. gave birth to a son when the Montrose was six days out from London. The child, however, lived only five days and died as the ship was nearing Anticosti. "It was an impressive and sad scene," said an officer of the Montrose, "when we buried the little fellow. The mother seemed to have gone mad with grief and wanted to come out on deck when she heard that we were about to give the little corpse a seaman's burial. She shrieked and cried alternately imploring us not to throw her baby into the sea."
