destiny, as well as the highest and noblest sphere for the exercise of her God-given talents, of every woman. Therefore, no properly constituted girl should allow her ambition to be diverted altogether from its natural goal—the exalted position of wife and mother, “queen of the home.” To this end, then, too much attention can scarcely be given to that all-important education in household affairs and domestic economy—a science, the study of which is too frequently neglected by girls, who seem to think it belongs only to their mothers and a bygone age.

The French Government has ordered that 63 abandoned mines in France are to be conceded to any persons willing to operate them under certain conditions. Of these 21 are iron ore mines, 9 are coal, 11 lignite, and the remainder copper, lead and zinc mines. The State owns the mineral right generally throughout France, and mining concessions cease when the lessees fail to work the properties. It is believed that co-operative associations of miners will be formed to work some of these abandoned undertakings. Are there not in this province numerous mines and mineral claims that have been practically, if not formally, abandoned and which might be similarly dealt with?
