

Blenkarn slams language head

Mississauga South MP Don Blenkarn has accused federal commissioner of official languages Max Yalden of "abusing your mandate and the taxpayers of the country."

Mr. Blenkarn has criticized the Treasury Board for spending $1.3 million on a game called Explorations, which is to be distributed to children to help promote a better understanding of other cultures and languages.

Mr. Yalden replied that the educational kit tries "to sensitize young Canadians to the multiplicity of languages in all corners of the world."

"We also hope they will appreciate that English and French are among the most widely used languages in the world and that Canadians should perhaps see it as an advantage rather than a burden that they are our official languages."

In Mr. Blenkarn's reply he says Mr. Yalden has exceeded his role in policing the Official Languages Act and has become "the promoter of languages."

While the MP said he has always supported the Official Languages Act and the commissioner, he said he couldn't accept the idea that Mr. Yalden "is all of a sudden endowed with the right to spend the public's money promoting games, or promoting an understanding of languages generally to the Canadian public."
