

Finally, Amnesty International in its annual report said, "The international protection of refugees is becoming increasingly difficult as governments become more restrictive in granting asylum. Men, women and children whose lives are in jeopardy are finding more and more doors to safe havens slammed in their faces." The report contained more critical entries than ever before, including those of Western Europe and North America, where Amnesty found "there is a growing tendency to treat increasing numbers of asylum applications as 'manifestly unfounded,' [creating] a real risk [of] unfair and arbitrary decisions" on refugee status (Ottawa Citizen, September 30).
