Greswell, William, M.B., F.R.C.I. Our South African Empire, Lon., 1885, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"Mr. Greswell has obviously scented South Africa from the inside as well as from the outside. Inclined to allow misanthropy to soar off into the clouds—or rather the mist—of rhetoric, he yet invariably writes like a scholar, and like a man anxious to do justice to opinions he has come by honestly and after independent research. . . . His work has no old-almanack dullness about it. It is essentially original."—Spectator, lviii, 1170.

Greville, Charles Cavendish Fulke. 1794-1865, eldest son of Charles and Lady Charlotte Greville, and grandson of the fifth Lord Warwick and of the third Duke of Portland; was educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took no degree, and from 1821 to 1860 was clerk of the Privy Council. Throughout that period he was in intimate relations with the leaders of both political parties, and saw much of the interior of court life. 1. The Precedence Question, Lon., 1840, 8vo. Anon. 2. Past and Present Policy of England towards Ireland, Lon., 1845. Anon. 3. The Greville Memoirs:

a Journal of the Reigns of King George IV. and King William IV. Edited by Henry Reeve. Lon., 1874, 3 vols. 8vo; new ed., 1875.

"No equally important contribution to the political history of the last generation has been made by any previous writer. Perhaps the only passage in the published portion of the Memoirs which could at present cause any offence is a probably unfounded charge against a lady who is still alive of having had thick ankles in her youth."—Sat. Rev., xxxviii, 608.

4. The Greville Memoirs: a Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, from 1837 to 1852, Lon., 1855, 3 vols. 8vo. "His sketches of character are sometimes almost worthy of St. Simon, whom he had probably studied with care, and they are the more valuable, though they may be less superficially consistent, because he often describes the same person more than once on varying occasions and in different moods of his own mind."—Sat. Rev., ix, 616.

Readers who expect to find in the second instalment of "The Greville Memoirs" . . . so many and such spicy bits of scandal as the previous three volumes contained will be disappointed. . . . It must be added that there is quite enough candid chronicling and sharp criticism in these volumes to make them amusing even to those who do not read them especially for the solid information they contain and the valuable side-lights they throw on the personal and general history of the time."—Atch., No. 396.

5. The Greville Memoirs: a Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, 1852-60, 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The completion of Mr. Greville's Journals is a considerable literary event. From first to last they cover a period of forty years; and few English memoirs have been so copious, so exact, so well informed, or so inclusive. In some respects this instalment lags behind the others. . . . There is little scandal, and the pages are almost exclusively occupied with political events. . . . On the other hand, these volumes bring us within reach of our own times, and what they lose in piquancy they gain in personal interest. . . . This record is one of the most valuable and interesting political books of the century."—Atch., xxxi, 62.

"He was peculiarly well informed on the most secret transactions of contemporary politics. He spared no pains in completing his information, recorded it with great freshness and perfect impartiality, and frequently revised his diaries. These characteristics, coupled with the brilliant portraits which he draws of his contemporaries, make his diaries the most important work of their kind of his generation."—*Dict. of Not. Greville, Henry William. 1801-1872, brother of C. C. F. Greville, supra; educated at Westminster, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated 1821; was private secretary to Lord Francis Egerton when chief secretary for Ireland, and attaché to the British embassy at Paris 1834-44. Leaves from the Diary of Henry Greville. Edited by [his niece] the Viscountess Enfield, Lon., 1883, 8vo. Second Series, 1884, 8vo.

"Many of the extracts here given . . . are too brief and superficial to throw much fresh light on the subjects they refer to, there is an abundance of pacy and instructive matter, showing pleasantly how a shrewd and amiable man, who had exceptional opportunities for observing social and political events, both at home and abroad, thirty or forty years ago, was impressed by what he saw."—Atch., No. 2906.

"Not only is this second volume . . . more interesting than the first, but it improves steadily from year to year."—Atch., No. 3287.
