TO MISS ---

Go happy note and meet the eye Wheer nought for me but dangers lie! If thou art spurn'd, or in the fire-Poor little martyr-should'st expire, I shall be spared the anguish keen To know that such thy fate has been ; But I will hope the maid I love Will let my vows her pity move, And having one kind kiss impress'd, May put thee in her gentle breast; And I will take an omen thence-Nor let my fair one deem offenees That I one day perchance may be Receiv'd to, like felicity.

A GREEK MARRIAGE

BY MISS PARDOS.

But I have, meanwhile, forgotten the pretty but trave, meanware, orgotten the pretty bride, who was to be married at the house of an intimate friend of eurs, and who, on my ar-rival there, was momentarily expected. The centre of the great Saloon was covered by a Torkey carpet, on which stood a reading des-cretain by a public embridges than the relation centre of the processing desk, overlaid by a gold embroidered handkerchief, and supporting a Bible and the two marriage rings; the whole bright with the profusion of silver money that had been cast over them. The lady of the house was to officiate as "gold-ness" to the bride, an office somewhat si-

The mody of the house was to entire a segmenth of the bride, an office somewhat similar to that of bride's maid; and she was even at that carry nour sparking with jewels, Atlength the sounds of music amounced the arrival of the marriage train; and we hastened to a window to watch for their approach. ed to a window to watch for the procession was an interesting one. The procession was an interesting one. The procession was an interesting one. The musicians were suceeded by the bridegreom cleet, waking between his own father and the father of his bride; one fair guf followed, accompanied by a couple of her young companions; and the two mothers, attended by "troops of friends," closed the train.

They were met at the threshold by the Archbishop of Nonmaudkeily and a party of priests, who immediately commenced chanting the mark upo service; and, as they ascended the stairs, showers of money were fluing over them from above.

the stairs, showers of money were flung over them from above.

In five minutes, the spacious soloon was silled to suffacation; the young couple were placed upon the edge of the careet, the nuprial crowns, formed of flowers, ribbons, and gold thread, were deposited on the reading desk; and the rector of the parish, silver, began a prayer, that was caught up at intervals by the choust boys, and repeated in a wild chant. At the conclusion of this prayer, which was of considerable length, the attendant priests flung over the Archbishop his progeous vestments of violet satin, embroidered with gold, and gilded with tissue; and he advanced to the reading desk, and took thence two brilliant diamond rings, with which he made the cross three times, on the forehead, lids, and breast of contracting parties; and then placed them in the hand of the significant of the contracting the summer of each, continued to hold them there whils the peclate read a portion of the gospel; after which, she changed the same cremonies with the nuprial crowns that he had previously encated with the rings; they were found in the proper owners. This done, the Archbishop pat the hand of the bride into that of her husband, and went through the same cremonies with the nuprial crowns that he had previously encated with the rings; they were shop parties and of the man of her husband, and went through the same ceremonies with the nupital crowns that he had previously enacted with the rings; they were then placed upon the heads of the young couiet places apole to wine being presented to ie Archlishop, he blessed it, put it to his lips, anded it to the bride and bridegroom, and thence delivered it up to the "godnother."
The crowns were next changed three several times from the one head to the other; and several wax candles being lighted, as I have described them to have been during the Eas-ter ceremonies at the Fanar, the whole party walked in procession round the carpet; and then it was that the silver shower fell thick and fast about then; the floor was literally

When the chanting ceased, the bride raised the hand of her new-made husband to her lips the hand of her new-made bushand to her type after which, every relative and friend of either party approached, and kissed them on the forchead. The Archbishop cast off his robes: the children exambled for the scattered mo-ney the band in the outer hall burst into an enlivening strain; and such of the company as were of sufficient rank to entitle then to do so, followed the bride and the lady of the house to an inner saloon, where a trais of servants were in attendance, bearing trays of preserved fruits and delicate little biscuits, which were given to each person to carry away.— Liquors were then offered, and subsequently coffee, after which each narried lady made a present to the bride of some article of value, previously to her departure from her home, whither we all accompanied her in procession; previously to her departure from her home, whither we all accompanied her in procession; and took our leave at the portal to the house her friends, and join in the cheerful morning ball which was about to commence. The effect of the golden tress that I had assisted to weave was very beautiful, binding as it did, the rich dark hair of the bride upon her fair young brow, and then falling to her feet; and her whole costume would have been emiheatly graceful, had she not been sinking un-der the heat and weight of the eternal cache-The nuptial crowns which I have men nate. The naputar crowns which I have men-tioned are about a foot in beight, and shaped like a bee-live when they were removed from the heads of the young couple, they were care-fully enveloped in a handkerchief of colored sauze, and borne away to be hung up in the chapel of the bride groom's he use, where they will remain until the death of either party, when the deceased is crowned for the second and last time, in the open coffin in which he is the grave.

The Greeks make almost as much toilet for The Greeks make almost as much toilet for funeral as for a marriage. Where the deceased is young and pretty, she is decked out in the gayest upparel, and not matroquently has her eye-brows stained, and a quantity of rouge spread over her cheeks, to cheat death for a few brief hours of his hyddiness; her glocal hands are carefully displayed; she thread out in jewels; and this frightful mockery is readered will more resolution by the fact that rendered still more revolting by the fact that she is paraded the streets, followed by female relatives, who weep, and sbriek, and bewail hemselves with a transient violence truly nal. At the grave side, all the finery is ped from the stiffened corps; the friends it away, a cover is placed over the coffin, tional. and the poor remains that were only a few in-stants previously so lavishly adorned, are con-signed to the earth, of which they are soon to form a part.

TRIFLES TO SMILE at.—A deceased, upright, and able chief justice of one of the courts, was once obliged to address a so-there in this case the counsel on both sides are unintelligible. the witnesses on both sides are incredible; and the plaintiff and defendant are both such as characters, that to me it is indifferent which way you give your verdict." Some catalogues and printed patticulars given by auctioneers are truly curious. Placards, headers also of a nobleman," may lead many persons to suppose that the sale of a nobleman's person is to take place in the most public markets of the metropolis. In a catalogue, a "great man's coat," and an "elegant lady's shawt," may seem to show that the pressure of the times affects all ranks, till it is explained that, by incorrectly placing the adjectives, two common articles of dress are only meant. "A mahogany child's chair," movesthe witnesses on both sides are incredible are only meant. "A manogary child's charge has certainly a dubious meaning; ?" moveable fixtures?" is declared to be correct, because technical—but in a sale of linen drapery, "a matchless piece of Irish," with twelve successive lots "ultto," is certainly an unequalled specimen of Hibernianism. A little of the control o unequalled specimen of Hibernianism. A ary in one of the canque rorts, being charged with an old woman accused of stealing a pair of boots, moved probably by the infirmities and miserable appearance of the prisoner, returned the following verdict:—"We find her not guilly, and hope she will never do so any more."

CHINESE Decrops.—It is said to be a custom in China, that the physicians of the royal household receive their salaries only during the time that his celestial majesty continues in good health; and consequently that as soon as he happens to be seized with any linese, the navmont of salaries is suspended as soon as he happens to be setzed with any illness, the payment of salaries is suspended until his recovery. This appears a wiser practice than our own, by which the fees of the sons of Galen increase with the increase of disorder,
