The Broken Circle!

CHAPTER X.
General Sir Arthur Hutton and his niece were soon settled in their new and magnificent home. To Leah it seemed as though she must be in the whirl of a dream. Her own story was to her very much like one of the fairy tales that had delighted her when she was a child. "I am a real Cinderella," she said to herself, with a smile. But in no way did she resemble that humble little maiden. She was proud by instinct and by nature. She was proud of her mother's name of Hatton, of the good old family from which her mother came, of the blood that ran in her veins from her mother's side. She was proud of being true to herself, of being loyal to what she believed to be right principles.

The compact made between her uncle and herself had not been broken. The name of Ray had been given up and she had adopted that of Hatton. "We will have no false pretences," the general had said. "You are my adopted daughter and heiress, but every one must know that you are my niece. I am in the place of your father; but while one lives who claims the title I should not like to usurp it. You are my niece, Leah Hatton; and, as we are discussing the subject for the last time, let me say that, should you ever wish to marry, I will myself tell to your future husband what I think he ought to know of your history. You must not do it yourself."

After that, not another word was spoken between them on the subject.

"People were not curious. It was sufficient to know that Leah Hatton was the adopted daughter and heiress of General Sir Arthur Hatton, K.C.B., one of the wealthiest and most famous men in England.

Leah was troubled at first when she saw the magnificence of the home that was to be hers. She imparted her fears frankly enough to the general, but he smiled at them.

"My dear Leah," he said, "no woman can be more than a lady—can be more than refined, well-bred, graceful

No Appetite

Nervous exhaustion leads to a taste for food. The nerves of the stomach are weak, digestion fails and you become generally upset and out of sorts.

The secret of complete restoration is in getting the nervous system fully built up.

Mrs. R. Cheney, 208 Richmond St., Chatham, Ont., writes:

"I was troubled with indigestion, which caused me many sleepless nights. I would be in terrible distress at times, and would get no relief for two or three hours. For sixteen months I ate nothing but Shredded Wheat biscuits, as I dare not eat anything else. I did not know what to do, as I had tried so many different remedies, as well as doctors' medicines, without gaining permanent relief. Finally I got some of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and while on the second box noticed that I was improving. I continued the treatment until I am now fully restored, and have returned to my regular diet. My husband has also taken Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with splendid results, so we are glad to recommend it to others."

and accomplished. You are all those. You will soon be accustomed to the new life; you will adapt yourself to it naturally. If there is any little deficiency in your knowledge of society matters, you will meet it by studying attentively the habits and manners of those about you."

From the first moment she entered his house she was, he told her, entirely mistress of it—there was no appeal against her authority. Most girls of her age would have been too young for such a position; but Leah was older than her years. It was a marvelous change for her, from the small, gloomy house in a dull street to that grand old mansion, where everything bespoke the pride of wealth and luxury. Some young heads would have been turned by it. Hers was not. She fell into the position so naturally that no one would have dreamed that she had ever held any other. Miss Hatton of Brentwood was quite a different girl from Leah Ray.

Sir Arthur had behaved in the most munificent manner. He had taken Leah first to London. It was a novelty for him to have the charge of a young and beautiful girl.

"You must have everything perfect, my dear niece," he said, "before you go to Brentwood. The eyes of servants are so quick to notice deficiencies. We must have a wardrobe, a case of jewels, and a lady's-maid before we go home."

Leah purchased just what she would, and Sir Arthur presented her with a superb suite of rubies.

"I have whole boxes of precious stones at Brentwood," he said; "and you must choose from them, Leah. Most of them were spoils, I believe, once in possession of Sir George Bourgoyne. My wife left them all to me."

"That has a magnificent sound, uncle," she returned—"whole boxes of precious stones!"

"My dear," he said, simply, "it is true. I could not enumerate the treasures that my wife possessed. I do not care about them myself. I dislike the sacking of cities, but Sir George did not. My wife had shawls worth any money, jewels of every kind, the finest satins, the rarest lace. She had embroidery and silk, ornaments of gold and of ivory, emerald necklaces of silver and of gold. I have never known what to do with them, but now I give them all to you."

"To me?" she exclaimed—"all those treasures to me? Uncle, you must think over it; perhaps you may want them some day. You might marry again."

"Never," replied the general, calmly. "I have the greatest respect and veneration for all women; but I shall never marry again." He was about to add that he had not intended to marry at all, but he stopped himself. "They are all yours," he repeated. "They have not been unpacked even yet; but when we reach Brentwood, they shall be put in your possession. India was a land of treasure, Leah."

"My life grows more like a fairy-tale every day," she said to herself; and from the depths of her heart came a great sigh that she could not share her treasure with Hettie.

Sir Arthur soon provided his beautiful young niece with a magnificent wardrobe; no marriage trousseau prepared for a princess could have been more elaborate, more costly. A clever, bright Parisian maid was also found; and Sir Arthur purchased for Leah one of the handsomest hacks in London, engaging at the same time a stable and dapper groom.

When all was ready and provided for, Sir Arthur and Leah left the possession of Brentwood. It was a bright beautiful day, and the park looked lovely; the grand old man, in the dazzling sunlight, was strikingly picturesque.

"Is this Brentwood, uncle?" asked Leah, her face growing pale with emotion as she gazed upon it.

"Yes, my dear; and it is a fitting home for the Hattons. It is mine now; it will be yours when I die."

"Mine!" she exclaimed; and a solemn sense of heavy responsibility came over her.

"Yes, yours, Leah; I have no relatives but you."

"It must be a fairy-tale," she said to herself; but her heart beat fast when her uncle led her into the magnificent abode that was to be her own in the years to come.

Though so grand and stately, there was something home-like about Brentwood. The rooms were all light and lofty, full of sunshine, and from most of them there was an uninterrupted view of the green undulating park;

The corridors were long and spacious. In the whole mansion there was not one gloomy spot; the windows were large, the perfumed breeze from the gardens seemed to sweep through the place. It was very ancient—rich in grand oak carvings, priceless oak-paneled walls with every kind of pretty nook and corner. Just where one least expected it was some bright little room, some flowery corner, some deep bay-window overlooking beautiful scenery, some pretty quiet nook seemingly made for tete-a-tetes. There were a large picture-gallery and a fine ballroom.

"We shall be happy here, Leah," said the general; "we have everything to make us so."

And she smiled in the fulness of content. But when she had taken possession of the suite of room prepared for her, when the magnificent dresses had been put away in the wardrobes made of cedar-wood, when the superb store of Indian treasures had all been examined, when she had grown accustomed to the luxury of a lady's maid and a groom, of horses and carriages, her heart turned with a great and wistful yearning to Hettie. She had loved her; and that love, checked by the rebellion against her fate, returned with double force now that her fear and dread were gone. To her proud, sensitive mind, it appeared a species cowardice to leave her sister to a fate she could not bear herself. Yet Hettie had elected to be so left; she would not come away with her. Her remembrance of that loving sister was the drawback to her perfect happiness.

She was alone in the cozy morning-room one morning when Sir Arthur came to seek her, his face full of delight.

"Leah," he cried, "can you guess what strange, good fortune has happened to me?"

She looked up at him with the brightest of smiles.

"How can I guess, uncle, when you have already all the good fortune in the world?"

"I have my share of it, Leah; that is quite certain. But this piece of good luck is something quite unlooked for and unexpected. You have heard me speak of a very dear friend I had many years ago—a young captain in our regiment—Harry Egremont?"

"Yes," replied Leah, who delighted in nothing so much as in listening to her uncle's stories of Indian life. "Yes, I remember the name."

"He was one of the finest fellows in the world," cried the general—"so sim-

Pope's Crown of Gems.

The wonderful Pope's Tiara, or crown, which the Pope, Pius XI, wears, is a magnificent ornament. It is formed on a basis of very fine felt covered with silver mesh, on which there are three crowns. Each of these consists of a gold band, set with jewels and edged with two rows of pearls. There are thirty pearls in each row.

In addition, the crown is decorated with sixteen rubies, three emeralds, a hyacinth, an aquamarine, three rubies, a sapphire, and eight gold points.

The second crown has ten emeralds, eight balas rubies, one chrysoberyl, two aquamarines, six small rubies, and three sapphires.

Nineteen small rubies, four sapphires, three hyacinths, three aquamarines, one garnet, eight gold floral ornaments—each set with two emeralds, one balas ruby, and a chrysoberyl—and eight gold points each trimmed with a garnet, adorn the third crown.

The top of the crown is covered with a thin layer of gold in which eight rubies and eight emeralds are set. This covering is surmounted by a golden globe, on top of which is a cross composed of eleven brilliants.

A PRACTICAL WORK OR MORNING DRESS.

Pattern 3426 is here illustrated. It is cut in 7 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measure. A 36 inch size will require 5 1/2 yards of 36 inch material.

This design has good features. The blouse may be slipped under the skirt, and the bib portion arranged over its front in apron style. When not required, the bib portion is slipped under the blouse, which worn over the skirt turns the dress into a model which may be worn out of doors for shopping, marketing, etc. The width of the skirt at the foot is about 1 1/2 yards.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 15c. in silver or stamps.

A SIMPLE PROCK FOR MOTHER'S GIRL.

3818. Active little girls like comfortable dresses, such as this model illustrates. This style is fine for all wash materials, and for serge, gabardine, mulling, taffeta, poplin and jersey cloth.

The pattern is cut in 4 sizes: 1, 2, 3 and 4 years. A 2 year size requires 2 yards of 36 inch material.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 15c. in silver or stamps.
