Derwent hesitated for a moment. Should he tell the whole, or only part, of that story? Nothing would have induced him to mention Dona Zarifa's name in connection with the final tragedy when speaking of it to Morell, but these were his nearest friends and relatives; was it not right that he should let them know the full greatness of his obligation? So he told the whole story; and never was narrative listened to with more rapt attention. Three pairs of widned eyes were fastened on his face as he spoke, and when he finished Mrs. Derwent fairly broke into sobs.

A Cast for Fortune

Properties of the relief expedition, as Derwent still laughingly called the party that had come so far to seek him. Though he had spoken lightly, he was in reality very grateful to Halbert, as well as to Sibyl Lenox, and he was determined to spare no effort to reward them for their kindness. Consequently, he worked eargetically in arranging expeditions of sight seeing, in organizing all the details which make such expeditions pleasant, and in providing them with many glowing memories of the beautiful Mexican capital to carry away with them.

DAGOUTTER OF DOISMAN, "HEAD?"

The nort instant Derwent saw the lender, black-clad form and pale, lovely face of his mother, with a wistful look in the deep-blue eyer, as she said, "My but he first eager questions had been answered, and Mrs. Derwent's anxiety somewhat reasured, Derwent found and the marching had been answered, and Mrs. Derwent's anxiety somewhat reasured, Derwent found and the surface of his mother surprise in store for him.

"You had. "I'l was too had your having had to take it without a masculine attendant; for that is something you, belongs to the new order of independent young ladies, she would start out, with a maid, to go around the world, but you are of the ancient regime, and I dear that it was very disagereable to you."

"Oh, has Sinyl not told you?" said Mrs. Derwent, "Wy said and come alone." "You did not come alone." "You have of the thinks. So it was exceedingly kind of heavy and you are so the ancient regime in the surface. Then he thre. ack his head and laughed uncontrollably. "Why, you orgonized a regular relief expedition?" "I would have come that you have a surface of the surfac Miwound, however, is not yet heald, and givs me some trouble."

You must have the best medical advice at ace, "said Mrs. Derwent, while Halbert locad at Sibyl and laughed.

This is pleasant, is it not?" he said.

"Think of our anxiety to reach the sufferer, ou hurried journey without pause, our caser desire to relieve him from the discosforts he was supposed to be enduring, while all the time he was 'enjoying an ideal lift and recovering his strength in the most saisfactory manner! I don't know what you may think of our journey to the land of he Montezumas, Miss Lenox, but I feel rader ridiculous."

'I do not," replied Miss Lenox, but I feel rader ridiculous."

'I do not," replied Miss Lenox, bottly.

'We came to relieve Cousin Margaret's aniety and to help her in any need that she might have for us. Of course, incident all, we should have been glad to have releved Geoffrey also.
