Baptized in the River.

March.

Baptized in the River.

Several hundred people stood on York street bridge yesterday afternoon and witnessed an interesting ceremony. In the river behind the rink two candidates for membership in the Church of the Latter Day Saints were immersed in the waters of the Thames. One was a man and the other a young girl. Elder Howlett officiated, and before the baptism prayed and gave out a hymn, which was sung by a number of the saints on the bank. The older waded into water waist deep, and repeating the words of the ritual, dipped each of the candidates in turn beneath the surface. The party immediately after adjourned to the York street mission near by, where the usual services consummated the administration of the important rite.

Pete Wood Talks Ball. Toronto World: Dr. Peter B. Wood, perhaps the best-known devotee of the diamond, is at present in the city. He has just completed his course in medicine at just complete and medicine at just considerable and m diamond, is at present in the city. He has just completed his course in medicine at the Western University, London, and taken on the title as above. The quondam Hamilton Clipper states that he believes there will be a revival in Canada in baseball this year, but it will be in the amateur line. He has had his day on the diamond, but still may play baseball for love of the game. "I think I could pitch the game of my life," said Pete yesterday, "and I hope to do some practicing on the University lawn before leaving the city." Dr. Wood looks the picture of health, and just the same as when he used to occupy the box for the Hams and send deceptive shoots at Cox's cracks over the Don and fill the local fans with gloom.

Arrested, Charged With Assault.

A young man named Forbes, who drives for Hamilton & Sons, was coming over Kensington bridge on Saturday night when three young men climbed on to his wagon, and, after throwing out and spoiling a brass boiler, they proceeded to assault him, splitting his ear. Forbes complained to Detective Graham who arrested two of the young fellows on King street. They gave their names as Harry Blackwell, Wellington street, and George McKenzie, Hamilton Row, London South. The third young man proceeded up Dundas street and, insulted a young lady. On the girl resenting the insult he struck her forcibly in the face and then made off. Theorying of the young lady drew the attention of a policeman, but the scamp had disappeared by this time. The two arrested were remanded until Tuesday by Squire Jarvis. Arrested, Charged With Assault.

Leavenworth Case To-Night. Leavenworth Case To-Night.

Admirers of fine acting and the thrilling excitement attendant upon the perpetration of a mysterious crime, and the pursuit and detection by skillful means of the one least suspected, are recommended by good authority to see Anna Katharine Green's "The Leavenworth Case" at the Grand to night. The language and construction are said to be such as only a refined and cultured author of her high standing would employ, and there is nothing of the brutal or repulsive element in it. The characters are people of education and position. The book is so well known that to tell the story over again would be superfluous. In brief, it is the love of the private secretary of Mr. Leavenworth for one of the latter's nieces, who does not look upon the love of the secretary with favor, and who has been Ont.—To be captain, Lieutenant Join Graham, R. London's offer was the only one the company would entertain and it looks now as if the Grand Trunk managers are in a mood to change their plans in favor of Sarnia, if the town is prepared to meet them in a reasonable, fair and business-like spirit. If they had no intention of locating the shops here they would have given as the same curt negative as was given to Hamilton and other cities.
